THE COLORED VOTE OF CONNECTICUT

The Administration and Congress—An Improved Sense of Feeling—A Broad Foundation for Further Co-Operation—The San Domingo Treaty in the Senate—Probable Opposition of Mr. Sumner—Mr. Bradley's Nomination.

From Our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, March 12, 1870.

There is manifestly a better state of feeling here in Republican circles than there was thirty days ago, and the prospect is that it will continue to improve. Three weeks ago I took occasion to allude to the fact that the cordiale cordiale between Congress and the Administration had apparently become impaired, and that, too, without cause sufficient to enable either party to justify itself in permitting much less fomenting, coldness, indifference and dissensions. Those allusions were freely canvassed by leading members of Congress and of the Administration, and their truthfulness was fully admitted. At the same time there was a deprecation of the existence of such a feeling, and the close observer of events during the past two weeks has not failed to discover apparently spontaneous efforts by both parties to achieve a better and more cordial understanding. This feeling has been, perhaps, to an indifferent observer, almost impalpable, but its existence is nevertheless a fact, and it is perfectly apparent to any one who studies the political atmosphere of Washington. Of one thing I think the country may rest assured, that, so far as the President is concerned, he means to do all he can to preserve the unity and integrity of the Republican Party. He believes, however, that a certain amount of purging is necessary, and that a party which has the courage to purge itself will also have the strength to carry and control the country.

Let any person who is thoughtfully studying the future course of politics, and especially the possible chances of the two parties, reflect a moment upon the very broad basis which President GRANT's Administration is laying for its future success. Twelve months of its career have just closed—the debt is reduced by ninety millions of dollars; the public expenditure is largely reduced; the public revenue is largely increased; the credit of the Government, as shown by the value of its bonded debt, is largely enhanced—the bonds of 1881 being above par in gold; the purchasing power of the currency is largely increased; reconstruction is practically complete; the Fifteenth Amendment and universal political rights are assured facts; the army establishment is greatly reduced; the Indian policy is greatly reformed; ocean postage is reduced nearly one-half; our foreign relations are on a dignified and peaceful footing, and the Monroe Doctrine is being gradually enforced by the peaceful, earnest efforts of the President, of which San Domingo is the first and preliminary step. If, in time of peace, with the burdens of a five years struggle successfully borne, this is not a broad foundation for the future, then the Republican Party ought to be content to fold its arms and allow its opponents to take the responsibility of the Government. If new Congress will do its duty by a sagacious and unsparing revision of the Tariff and Tax laws another element will be added to this foundation, which will increase in breadth and depth. Let the results that have been accomplished, and the work that is being done, be looked at dispassionately, and the conviction follows that the helm of the Administration is in safe hands, and that there is no occasion for croakings or false alarms. It is not impossible that, as some of these facts have been rather prominently brought out in Congress and elsewhere during the past two weeks, it may have had something to do with the improved state of feeling.

Touching the San Domingo Treaty in the Senate, there is an increased feeling in its behalf. Mr. SUMNER, however, may be expected to oppose it, probably throughout. Not that he is more hostile to this purchase than he would be to that of any other in that quarter, but because he is opposed to any acquisition of territory or population in that direction. He regards it as an open question whether we ought to incorporate into this country any of the Latin race, with its treacherous blood and its notions of superstition and bigotry. He made a blooming Paradise of Alaska, and would to-morrow vote to extend our domain on the north, in the direction of Canada and British Columbia. But a foot-hold in the West Indies he seems to think of no particular consequence. An effort is being made to have this treaty considered in open Senate. Mr. MORTON, who is also a friend of Cuba, readily perceives the importance of the position which San Domingo will give us in its relations to Cuba, and the country will expect him to place the question before the Senate in its true aspect.

In alluding to the recent visit of the President to the Senate, some journals are ascribing to him a willingness to withdraw the name of Mr. BRADLEY, and nominate a man who resides in the Southern Circuit. If such was clearly the wish of the Southern Senators. This is an error. No doubt the President deserves all that is said in praise of his efforts to come to a cordial understanding on all matters wherein he and any particular member of the party disagree; but in this case there was no occasion requiring the President to make such a proposition, for this reason, viz.: The objection by the Southern Senators to Mr. BRADLEY is that he does not reside in the Circuit; but Mr. BRADLEY has overcome that by announcing his readiness to take up his residence in that circuit if confirmed. This has had the effect, at least, to secure for him the support of several leading Senators who voted against Judge HOAR because he would not consent to reside in the circuit. It will thus be seen that there is no occasion for the President to yield to the captious demands of probably a minority of the Senate. CYMON.

Tennessee Reconstruction—Troops Ordered to the State—The Fifteenth Amendment and the Connecticut Election—The Georgia Case—The New Army Bill.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 12.—The President and Secretary of War have decided to send four companies of United States troops to Tennessee to aid the revenue officers in enforcing the laws, and to aid other United States officers in executing processes and preserving the peace. Two companies will be sent to Murfreesboro and two to Jackson. This is in response to the appeals of those people of Tennessee who have written upon the President during the last week, and laid before him the condition of affairs in that State. Gen. SHERIDAN has finished his bill in relation to Tennessee, and yesterday submitted it to the members from that State. On Monday he will present it for the action of the Committee on Reconstruction. The bill does not propose to territorialize the State, or to put it under military control, but it recites that Gov. SENTER was elected by fraud, and that the Reconstruction acts of Congress were violated in the registration. It therefore proposes to vacate the election null and void, and to order a new registration and a new election. This bill will unquestionably meet with great opposition in Republican quarters, yet it is argued with a great deal of force that if Georgia has been a State in the Union, and Congress can step in and correct irregularities there under the authority of the Constitution, then it can, in the exercise of that power, do the same thing in Tennessee or any other State. Those Republicans in Congress who support the Bingham amendment to the Georgia bill do so on the broad ground, to wit: That Georgia is a State in the Union; that the form of Government become anti-republican through the illegal action of her Legislature, and that Congress, under section 4 of article 4 of the Constitution, has the right to overthrow this illegality and make the government of Georgia truly republican in form; and, if in Georgia, WHY not in Tennessee?

RATIFICATION OF THE FIFTEENTH AMENDMENT.

The proclamation of the ratification of the Fifteenth Amendment is signed ready for promulgation, and it is expected that it will be out by the close of this week, as Georgia and Texas will both undoubtedly be admitted within the next few days. Registration in Connecticut closed on Saturday, but under the laws of that State any person whose right to vote accrues after that date, and before the election, may be registered up to within one week prior to election day. The colored voters of that State have therefore been provisionally registered and if the proclamation is issued any time prior to the 26 h, it will enfranchise them in time for the election.

GEORGIA.

The Georgia bill will be taken up in the Senate to-morrow. There has been a good deal of speculation and canvassing among Senators as to the probable fate of the bill, but notwithstanding all that has been said and the efforts that have been made, it is very difficult to say with certainty what will be done. The Senate is always a very uncertain body, and until the vote is actually recorded there is no telling what change may come over the dreams and convictions of honorable members. It is argued with much positiveness that the Bingham amendment will be rejected, but those who favor that side of the question are equally certain that it will be accepted. BUTLER and BULLOCK are as persistent in their efforts to procure the former result as ever, and it is by no means improbable that they will succeed. Among the interesting incidents of the discussion to-morrow will be the maiden speech by Mr. REVELS, and the delivery of the first speech in the United States Senate by a colored man. The galleries will doubtless be thronged in anticipation of this event. The bill will scarcely be finished in that body to-morrow; indeed, the debate will probably last several days.

GROWTH OF THE REVENUE.

The following table exhibits in a most interesting and satisfactory manner the gradual and certain growth of the internal revenue. The several columns show the aggregate collections for the year ending at the several dates. Each additional month shows an increase in every item, and, as a consequence, an increase in the total over its predecessor. Take any item in the list, and follow it through from month to month, and the growth of the revenue becomes apparent at once. Commissioner DELANO's estimate of the revenue for the current fiscal year was $175,000,000. This requires a gain of sixteen millions over last year. Nineteen millions have already been gained; but inasmuch as nine millions of tax were obtained in the last quarter of the last fiscal year from whisky which was forced out of bond by operation of law, it is expected that the remaining months of the current fiscal year will show a slight comparative decrease, and that the net gain for the year will just about fulfill the estimate of the Commissioner:

† The decrease in receipts from penalties is occasioned by the fact that the Department now more uniformly prosecutes suits to a conclusion, thus reducing the number of compromises, whereon penalties are paid in lieu of taxes.

TAX ON THE SALE OF SHIPS.

Some of the internal revenue officers having construed the tax on sales of goods, wares and merchandise, to cover the sale of ships, the matter has been presented to Commissioner DELANO by Hon. H. H. STARKWEATHER, of Connecticut, and Mr. DELANO has presented the matter to the Committee of Ways and Means, accompanied with a recommendation that such changes be made in the law as will relieve ship-builders, not only from this tax, but as far as possible from all taxes on ship-building. The tax above alluded to is imposed by virtue of a construction given to the fourth section of the act of March 31, 1866.

REFORM BEFORE COMMITTEES.

Gen. PAINE will endeavor to obtain the attention of the House, to-morrow, to call up some contested election cases. He will report against BEGAR, Member at Large from Virginia. A majority report will also be presented. The cases of BEALDON and others will probably be reported on later in the week. At the session of the House Committee on Pacific Railroads, yesterday, statements were made by various gentlemen for and against the grand consolidation railroad scheme in Kansas. The Missouri River, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad Company was represented by Gen. CRAIG, Mr. ABEL and Hon. R. T. VAN HORN; the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company had for its champions LEVI PARSONS, ex-Secretary of the Interior UHLMAN and Col. N. S. GOSS, of Humboldt. The Committee have not yet agreed on the action to be taken in reference to these projects. The Senate Military Committee had a session on Saturday in reference to the Army bill, which has passed the House. Many army officers, but not all, are strongly opposed to the passage of this measure. There is no denying that the current of political as well as private opinion is in favor of the bill, possessing as it does the grand element of economy. It is believed that the Committee will report in favor of agreeing to its main provisions.

PERSONAL.

Among the prominent arrivals here are Ex-Postmaster-General Randall, L. H. Boales, Rev. C. D. Foss, James Lorimer Graham and Benj. Field, of New-York, G. W. Frost, of Omaha, Gen. G. M. Dodge, of the Pacific Railroad, who are at Willard's; Gen. E. A. Merritt, W. T. Blodgett, J. N. Hegeman, Alfred Wagstaff, of New-York, J. R. Alaben, of Brooklyn, and Hon. Wm. Windom, of Minnesota, who are at the Arlington. Charles Carleton Coffin is also here.

THE FUNDING BILL—SEVENTH SECTION.

Several important errors having occurred in the publication of the seventh section of the Senate Funding bill, as passed by that body, it is herewith communicated in a corrected form:

And be it further enacted, That on and after the 1st day of October, 1870, registered bonds of any denomination, not less than $1,000, issued under the provisions of this act, and which shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States as security for the notes issued to the National Banking Associations for circulation under an act entitled "An act to provide for their circulation and redemption," approved June 3, 1864, and all National Banking Associations, organized under said act or any amendment thereof, are hereby required to deposit bonds issued under this act as security for their circulating notes within one year from the date of the passage of this act, in default of which their right to issue notes for circulation shall be forfeited, and the Treasurer and the Controller of the Currency are hereby authorized and required to take such measures as may be necessary to call in and destroy their outstanding circulation, and to return the bonds held as security therefor to the associations to which they were issued, in sums of not less than $1,000, provided that any such Association now in existence may, upon giving thirty days' notice to the Controller of the Currency, by resolution of its Board of Directors, deposit lawful money notes with the Treasurer of the United States to the amount of its outstanding circulation, and take up the bonds pledged for its redemption; and provided further that not more than one-third of the bonds deposited by any bank, as such security, shall be of the class of bonds herein authorized, bearing the rate of interest of five per cent., and not more than one-third shall be of the class of bonds herein authorized, bearing the rate of interest of four and a half per cent.

THE STORM.

Vehicular Locomotion in the City—Travel by Railroad—The Mails.

The storm which has just visited this section commenced in rain and sleet on Saturday night, and in this form continued without interruption until soon after midnight, when it changed to snow, and by morning had covered the ground to the depth of about four inches. The wind, which accompanied it, was strong from the northeast, and at times grew into the proportions of a gale, which must have been seriously felt on the coast. The snow was not drifted to any considerable extent, but pedestrians who encountered it suffered seriously from the cutting blasts of the wind and the needle like particles of snow and ice which were driven about by the force of the gale.

As usual the City railroads were blocked up by the snow to such an extent that ploughs were resorted to in order to keep the track clear, and teams were doubled on all the lines. In this way trips were made with a considerable degree of regularity. The ferry-boats made their transit without difficulty, for there was no ice in the streams to impede their progress. Travel of the traveling public who were compelled to be out in the storm, experienced far less difficulty in getting about than they would have done had it been a week day, for then the crowd upon the cars would naturally have been increased, and the burden upon the "beasts of burden" would have been very serious.

In some respects it is fortunate that the storm occurred on Sunday. On that day there is very little travel in the City, and by railroad trains it is generally suspended. The trains leaving the City for the South, by the New-Jersey railroads left on time, but some of them that were due here were detained, but not seriously. The same may be said of the trains on the other roads. The members of the Legislature residing in this section usually go to their arduous duties by the Sunday night's train, but last evening few were found willing to "brave the pelting of the pitiless storm." Eastward bound travelers were few in number, and the trains thitherward probably encountered little difficulty in making their trips.

The storm was not serious enough to cause any protracted delay in the arrival of the mails. The Eastern and Southern trains reached this City at the usual hour yesterday, but the Erie express train, carrying the Western mails, had not been heard from up to 10 o'clock last evening. The train was due at 7 o'clock. It was supposed that its progress had been somewhat retarded by the snow, but it was confidently expected that it would reach here all safe before midnight.

The Snow in the Country—Collapse of the Court-House Roof in Chicago.

BOSTON, Mass., March 13.—The heaviest snow-storm of the season prevailed today. The snow is nearly a foot in depth. It is feared that the railroad trains will be badly blocked.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y., March 13.—A severe snow and hail storm has prevailed along the Hudson for sixteen hours, accompanied by a high wind. The snow and hail here is eight inches deep. The storm is heavier north of this city. Railroad travel is not affected.

WORCESTER, Mass., March 13.—A heavy snow-storm, accompanied by a high wind, has prevailed all day, and still continues.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., March 13.—The weather reports from Wisconsin and Minnesota show the storm to be general over the Northwest. It has been snowing, blowing and drifting for the past twenty-four hours, and the trains in Minnesota are snowed up, and in Wisconsin very much impeded.

CHICAGO, March 13.—A severe hail and snow storm has been raging in this city and throughout the Northwest, increasing in intensity during the evening. Several inches of snow has fallen here, and the wind is blowing heavily. The street cars have stopped running. At Winona, Minn., there is fifteen inches of snow. Railroad operations are greatly interfered with. At 11½ o'clock last night, the roof of the east wing of the Court-house followed the example of the west wing, and fell in with a tremendous crash. The disaster was caused by the weight of snow on the roof. No one was injured. The loss is probably from ten to twenty thousand dollars on each wing. The snow-storm continued throughout last night, and was by far the severest of the season; today, however, the weather has been quite pleasant.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 13.—A snow-storm commenced early this morning and continued all day and up to midnight. The accumulation in the streets is larger than before this season. The freight house of the Fall River steam-boats was crushed in by the weight of snow on the roof. The train from Boston came in half an hour late, with two engines.

BOSTON, March 13—Midnight.—The snow-storm has ended. The depth is about fifteen inches on the level.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., March 13.—The snow-storm today was the most severe of the season, and was accompanied by a high wind. A foot of snow has fallen. The storm continues.

The Misunderstanding Between Duke Pastrana and the Prince Bourbon—Disturbances of the Peace Threatened—Carlists in Spain—Gen. Prim and the Sale of Cuba.

MADRID, March 13.—The meeting between Prince HENRI DE BOURBON and the Duke DE MONTPENSIER took place on Saturday morning, seven miles from the walls of Madrid. The principals drew lots for the first shot, and Prince Henri won. The adversaries exchanged their first fire at ten paces, without result. They then advanced on each other. At seven paces Prince HENRI fired and missed. The Duke returned the fire with fatal effect, shooting his adversary through the head. The latter fell to the ground, and in a few moments expired. The Duke DE MONTPENSIER showed the utmost calmness during the combat, but was much affected when informed of its result. As the Prince was poor, the Duke offers to provide for his widow and children. The quarrel was caused by a harsh letter against the Duke which the Prince addressed to the Montpensierists. HENRI DE BOURBON was brother of the Prince DE ASSIS, consort of the ex-Queen ISABELLA, and cousin of the Duchess of MONTPENSIER....It is reported that in spite of the constant vigilance of the authorities on both sides of the frontier, numbers of Carlists have crossed into Spain....In the Cortes yesterday, a Deputy asked if there was any foundation for the statement made by a New-York journal that Senator SUMNER said he had received propositions from Gen. PRIM for the sale or cession of Cuba to the United States. Gen. PRIM pronounced the statement utterly false. An interpellation regarding the granting of political privileges to Cuba having been addressed to the Government by the Cortes, Gen. PRIM replied that no election for Deputies to the Cortes had been held in that island, the authorities reporting that the time had not yet arrived, and the troubles were not all ended.

Another Account of the Duel—Three Shots Fired—French Intrigue Connected with It.

MADRID, March 13.—The duel between the Duke DE MONTPENSIER and Prince HENRI DE BOURBON creates immense excitement. It was caused by some insulting letters written by the latter, branding MONTPENSIER as a Jesuit conspirator, and calling him a bloated French pastry cook. Gens. ALAMINOS and CORDOVA and Col. BOLER acted as the seconds of the Duke, and three Republican Deputies to the Cortes performed the same service for HENRI DE BOURBON. The Prince won the choice of weapons and ground and the right to the first shot. The distance was ten paces, the combatants firing alternately. The weapons used were revolvers. The first and second shots of the Prince DE BOURBON missed; at his third the bullet grazed the cheek of the Duke, causing a slight wound. MONTPENSIER's first shot missed, and his second slightly wounded the Prince, and his third proved fatal, the ball entering the forehead of the Prince and killing him instantly. The Duke exclaimed, "My God! what have I done!" and swore to protect the Prince's children. MONTPENSIER and his seconds are in Madrid and have not been arrested. It is said that this affair will injure the Duke's chances for the throne. When the Duke had fired twice, the seconds endeavored to effect a reconciliation, but the Prince was furious and refused all offers. It is rumored that a French intrigue is at the bottom of the duel.

Enforcing the Laws in Ireland—Extraordinary Powers to the Magistracy.

LONDON, March 13.—The Cabinet has decided on a measure to be submitted to Parliament which has for its object the enforcement of the laws in Ireland. It is based on ALTHORP's law of 1833 and GREY's law of 1847. The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland is to have power to proclaim districts where unusual trouble exists. Extraordinary powers of arrest and detention are granted to magistrates in such districts, after proclamation. In some cases Police and jury trials are dispensed with. The Police force is to be largely increased. The bill will be introduced on Thursday by Right Hon. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE, the Chief Secretary for Ireland....The arrival of the steamer Smidt at New-York has had the effect of strengthening confidence in the safety of the City of Boston. The belief is now general, both here and at Liverpool, that the missing steamer will be heard from at the Azore Islands....Advices from Rio Janeiro report that the vomito prevails in that city.

French Relations With Rome—An Important Explanation.

PARIS, March 13.—It is reported that Count DARU, Minister of Foreign Affairs, will issue a manifesto explaining the policy of France toward the Ecumenical Council. Count DARU has not demanded that France have a representative in the Council, because of the proposed introduction of the dogma of infallibility, but on account of the publication of the scheme which seems to touch the question of Church and State. Official journals say there is no intention of withdrawing the French troops from Rome; they are there to defend the territorial rights, not the religious claims of the Holy See.

Death of Montalembert—The French Senate and the Ministry—The Ex-Queen Isabella's Litigation.

PARIS, March 13.—The Count DE MONTALEMBERT, chief of the Liberal Catholic Party, is dead. All the journals, including the Ultramontane organs, appear in mourning. The Count DE MONTALEMBERT was in his sixtieth year.... Rumor anticipates that the Senate will refuse to adopt the Senatus Consultum introducing liberal reforms in the system of nominating Mayors, and fears are entertained of a conflict between that body and the Ministry. The Corps Legislatif has adjourned for eight days ....The radical journals of this city attack JULES FAVRE bitterly for having, in his last discourse in the Corps Legislatif, promised his aid to the Ministry....The ex-Queen ISABELLA of Spain and her husband, Don FRANCISCO D'ASSIS, have agreed to submit their differences to arbitration. The tribunal will be composed of five persons, one of whom will be JULES FAVRE.

JAPAN.

Export of Coal in Steamers Free—A Duty on Exports in Sailing Vessels.

WASHINGTON, March 13.—The Department of State has been informed that the Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs proposes, with the view to obviate constantly recurring difficulties at the open ports, hereafter to permit the export of Japanese coal in steamers duty free, but that the fixed duty, according to the tariff appended to the Convention of Yedo of June 25, 1866, shall be levied on that article, irrespective of quantity, when taken on board of sailing vessels. The Minister further suggests, if approved, that it will be unnecessary to enter into a formal amendment of the said tariff in this respect, but that a notice given to the local authorities, both foreign and Japanese, shall be deemed sufficient. This arrangement having been unanimously accepted by the foreign representatives, the Japanese Ministers were notified accordingly.

Escape of Morgan, the Murderer of Col. Crane, in Mississippi.

JACKSON, Miss., March 13.—E. M. YERGER escaped from jail this morning at 5 o'clock. He was yesterday brought before the Court to argue the application for habeas corpus. The case was postponed to the second Monday in April. A bill was yesterday introduced in the Legislature restricting the power in applications for writs, and the bill will probably pass before the time set for YERGER's trial. The act would have a bearing on this case, hence YERGER's escape. The Sheriff and his posse have been searching for him all day, without success.

THE INDIANS.

The Victory over the Piegans—General Order from Gen. Sheridan—The Troops Congratulated—Gen. Sully on the Indian Troubles.

CHICAGO, March 13.—Gen. SHERIDAN yesterday issued the following General Order:

"The Lieutenant-General commanding this Military District takes pleasure in announcing to his command the complete success of a detachment of the Second Cavalry and the Thirteenth Infantry under command of Brevet Col. BAKER, of the Twenty-second Cavalry, against a band of Piegan Indians in Montana. These Indians, whose proximity to the British line has furnished them an easy and safe protection against attack, have hitherto murdered and stolen with comparative impunity, in defiance and contempt of the authority of the Government. After having been repeatedly warned they have at last received a carefully prepared and well merited blow in the middle of Winter, with the thermometer below zero, and when experience had led them to believe they could not be reached, the blow fell. One hundred and seventy-three Indians were killed, 140 horses captured, and the villages and property of the band totally destroyed. The Lieutenant-General cannot commend too highly the spirit and conduct of the troops and their commander; the difficulties and hardships they experienced in the inclemency of the weather, and as one of the results of this severe but necessary and well merited punishment of these Indians, he congratulates the citizens of Montana upon the prospect of future security."

WASHINGTON, March 13.—General SULLY in a communication to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated August last, but which has just been published, says:

"My reasons for apprehending trouble in Montana are that war parties of Indians from the Powder River country and the Yellowstone, and from Idaho and Washington Territories, frequently visit the Territory of Montana and often commit depredations on the whites. The whites retaliate by killing any Indians they chance to meet, sometimes in the most brutal and cowardly manner. There is a white element in this country, which, from its rowdy and lawless character, cannot be excelled in any section, and the traffic in whisky with Indians in the Territory is carried on to an alarming extent. This frequently causes alterations between whites and Indians, resulting often in bloodshed, and they occur in sections of the Territory where the civil authorities acknowledge themselves to be powerless to act, nothing but military force can at present put a stop to it. The law-abiding citizens of Montana are anxious for peace and quiet with the Indians, and would willingly give any assistance in their power to aid and assist the civil authorities to carry out the laws if they were backed by force."

Official dispatches from the Indian agent at Santa Fé, New-Mexico, show matters to be very quiet among the Pueblo Indians, nothing of any particular interest having recently occurred. Agricultural implements had been issued to the Indians in some of the villages, and others had been sent for by the agent to receive their share, but those of Santa Clara, San Yedezouse Nombe and Tesuque refused to receive their portion, saying that the small amount would not admit of their giving each one a present, and unless each could be done great dissatisfaction would follow. Explanations were made to them that, owing to the small apportionment, the whole amount was to be divided among the Pueblos according to the population of each village. The Pueblos below Santa Fé, who seem to be the most industrious, have accepted their portion.

THE WEST.

Desperadoes Ranged in Nebraska—Municipal Purity in Chicago—Perjury and Corruption.

NORTH PLATTE, Neb., March 12.—At a late hour last night, a man named KIRT was knocked down and robbed of his watch and about a hundred dollars in currency. Mr. KIRT was so brutally beaten that his recovery is doubtful. The desperadoes are, without a doubt, the same party that robbed the jewelry store of McLUCAS & DICK, not long since. Acting Deputy Sheriff J. A. LOBLEY, assisted by several citizens, this afternoon rode down on a hand-car to the "Old Doby," on this side of the bridge, and arrested two men, who gave their names as F. WARD and JAMES BALES. A broken revolver already charged, with fresh blood stains on it, was found. In the bark of an old log, buried outside the shanty, was found most of the jewelry which was recently stolen from McLUCAS & DICK, tied up in two handkerchiefs, together with papers and letters which show them to be regular desperadoes. In one letter a friend said that $200 had been offered for one of their number by Superintendent FILLMORE. One of the party of desperadoes, named JOHN JAMES, is missing, but the officers are on the look out for him. It is reported that JAMES was shot on the east side of the river the afternoon by one of the party which was after him. WARD and BALES, upon their arrival here in the custody of Sheriff LOBLEY, were seized by a mob and hanged.

EUROPEAN NEWS BY MAIL.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP AMERICA.

The steamship America, which left Bremen Feb. 26 and Southampton March 1, reached this port yesterday. The news she brings is later by four days than that at hand by the Russia steamer, the files, however, being incomplete in consequence of the non-arrival of the Scotia, from Liverpool Feb. 26 and Queenstown Feb. 27.

A letter in the London Times refers to the advisability of searching for the missing steamship City of Boston, and sets forth that the screw of that vessel lacked two of its fans when it sailed from Halifax.

It was rumored in Paris that ALEXANDRE DUMAS had had a fit of apoplexy. Figaro says that it cannot vouch for the attack, hopes the story is a mistake, and only mentions it to have the pleasure of contradicting it in the event of its not being true.

The journals announce the death, at Paris, of M. DUMON, aged seventy-four, formerly Minister of Public Works and of Finance under the Monarchy of July. Baron DE KŒNERRITZ, Diplomatic Representative of Saxony at Vienna, had just died in that city after a short illness.

The hope of a compromise between Austria and Bohemia appears to be now abandoned. The Politik of Prague, in fact, announces that the Teheque leaders have addressed to Gen. KOLLER a letter, in which they definitively decline the invitation to go to Vienna to take part in a conference on the conditions of an arrangement between Bohemia and the Government.

THE MORDAUNT DIVORCE CASE.

Final Proceedings—Charge of the Judge and Verdict of the Jury.

The testimony in the Mordaunt divorce case having been printed in full in the TIMES, the closing scenes in this remarkable suit naturally call for description. The final sitting of the Court was occupied with the charge of the Judge Ordinary, the rendering of the jury's verdict following.

THE CHARGE.

The Judge Ordinary, addressing the jury, said: The case of Sir CHARLES MORDAUNT has been conducted by an intrepid advocate, who has omitted nothing which he felt it to be his duty to state, and who is a consummate master of legal rhetoric. The investigation has taught us precisely what could be proved, to justify or confirm the statements made by Lady MORDAUNT herself after her confinement; and in reference to the Prince of WALES particularly, it must be a matter of congratulation to you that the advocate for Sir CHARLES MORDAUNT honestly came forward and told you fully and exactly whatever he could put before you. On this subject his language was the same, both in his opening speech and in his review of the evidence. I am afraid I rather embarrassed him by suggesting that names of parties should not be mentioned in the first place, but neither in his opening nor closing speech did he make any charge of adultery against the Prince of WALES, or go further than to suggest the existence of an intimacy between the Prince and the respondent greater than her husband desired. I advised that the matter should be tried before a jury, and the sanity or insanity of the lady determined. If Lady MORDAUNT is out of her mind now, and if, in three, or four, or five years she is fit to answer, Sir CHARLES MORDAUNT will have his remedy. Therefore your finding, if it should be that she is insane, would not put an end to Sir CHARLES' remedy; however, it is a question which has never been argued, whether, even if Lady MORDAUNT is insane, Sir CHARLES would be estopped from going on with his suit. You have been asked in stirring language whether you are to bar Sir CHARLES MORDAUNT from getting a divorce and its fruits to this woman for life. These are stirring topics, and they were not directed to the real issue. It will be your duty to consider how far the statements she made after her confinement are true. The ordinary process is reversed, and the adultery is introduced to prove the insanity. The sanity of the statement is the very thing that is at issue, and the question is, if the facts are true, is there some way to show that she was sane when she made them. Let us see how far it is established incidentally that the lady committed adultery. First, with regard to Lord COLE, the evidence seems to me of a very cogent character. The respondent made an entry in an almanac, and opposite the 3d of April she put a mark, and 280 days from the 27th of June. Now we have it from Sir CHARLES MORDAUNT that she was expected to be confined about the 3d of April. What could this mean but that she was to be confined on the day 280 days after the day on which her child was conceived? On the 27th of June her husband was at Norway, and the appearance of the child tallied with that period, on the day Lord COLE was there and remained one hour and three quarters after those who were there with him had gone. Was this in accordance with the usual custom of society? This is not all. On the day she goes down to Warwick he meets her at Paddington and holds the door open, and travels with her as far as Reading. A few days afterward he went down and stopped there a guest of Lady MORDAUNT for four days. On the 18th of July Sir CHARLES MORDAUNT comes home. Well, when Lady MORDAUNT is confined, she says "That is Lord COLE's child," and repeats it every day following. Then in the case of Capt. FARQUHAR, it was certainly proved that Capt. FARQUHAR was in the hotel on the night that Lady MORDAUNT went there. Where he passed the night has not been proved. But I doubt whether you would attribute much weight to all that is in the letter. Lady MORDAUNT went home on Saturday, the 9th, and she was unwell for a week, and this letter was not discovered until the following Saturday. But some conversation passed between BIRD and CLARK, and hence the former put by his Mormon letter. The suspicious part of the matter is the way the letter came to light. JESSIE CLARK having told every thing she knew except about the letter which was not mentioned to the attorney until April by CLARK. This throws some amount of shadow on the matter. The case with regard to Sir FREDERICK JOHNSTONE is so slight that if I were trying a case of adultery I should have to say that there was no evidence independent of Lady MORDAUNT's admission. The whole evidence is that he dined with Lady MORDAUNT. I must not omit the case of the Prince of WALES. In the evidence in his case it is said he called frequently. (Here the learned Judge read the evidence of JESSIE CLARK, JOHNSON and BIRD, deposing to the visits of the Prince of WALES.) Here again I should have to say to you that there is no evidence. His calls were at established hours, and in accordance with the usages of society. I now pass away from that branch of the inquiry. And now we approach what is the real question in the case—the sanity or not of this lady at certain times. There are all sorts of words used to express insanity, and there is as great a variety in the diseases of the mind as in diseases of the body. The only way in which I can put the question to you is this: I must ask you whether you think this lady was in such a state of mental disorder as to be able fitly to instruct her attorney. There are two periods which have been brought before us. The respondent confined his attention to the period from the 26th of April to the 27th of June. The petitioner, however, went into the period of March and April, and it is most at that Sir CHARLES MORDAUNT's counsel should insist on laying this period before you. I think you must strive to make both periods harmonize with each other, and you may reason from one period to the other, from the first to the second or from the second to the first. Tests have been reported to by the petitioner. He said the lady made certain confessions—were they true? Secondly, he asks what reasonable things did she say or do? I am not quite sure that either of these tests is perfect. Suppose that Lady MORDAUNT manufactured statistics, and that it was true, is it quite certain that her mind was not disordered? Is a woman at the time of her confinement, prostrated, she is of disordered sense, moved to refer to any thing that occurred? Is it a test? Would it be impossible for a guilty woman to confess her guilt, and, with her imagination excited, add a number of other things that are untrue? It has been suggested that she made the confession because she knew the child was ill. If that was shown it would indicate a rational process in her mind. But facts do not support it. On Monday and Tuesday she said the child was Lord COLE's, and then she asked the nurse whether there was any thing the matter with the child? The n

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE ILIAD OF HOMER. Translated into English blank verse by WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT. Vol. 1. (12 books.) Boston: FIELDS, OSGOOD & CO. 1870.

Since the beginning of the seventeenth century repeated attempts have been made to translate the master poems of the Greek and Latin literatures into English verse. We suppose it will be acknowledged that those attempts have for the most part failed. The truth is that translation, as practiced in England, cannot properly be called an art. There are no fundamental principles universally recognized as the conditions of its development. It is still hardly more than a trick in which one succeeds better than another, but each proceeds upon a method of his own. Who has prefaced his work with such a definition of translation as criticism can admit to be exhaustive and final? We might have expected so much from HOMANS. We do not find it. DRYDEN'S cardinal idea that translation is "a kind of drawing after the life" has never been literally accepted by others. It did not uniformly govern himself. The face seen and the face drawn both appeal to the brain through the eye, whereas even those English translators who aim to infuse the identical thought, feeling or fancy of their original have recourse to media of sensual metaphor, sometimes modified, sometimes distinct from those employed in their author's language. There is another theory—that we should ask ourselves what our author would have said had he been writing in English. The objection to this view is not, as Mr. NEWMAN thinks, that no two men would agree in their answers to such a question. So far as a translator is concerned the question is not worth an answer. HOMER, if an Englishman, and writing in our tongue, would unquestionably have given a different turn and tinge to his verse to that which it takes in Greek. But we are bound to make the province of translation, as discriminated from paraphrase, the reproduction of what an author did actually say. Certainly the aim of Homeric translators into our tongue should be,—not, of course, to compass the effect produced upon an Athenian reading HOMER in the age of PEISISTRATOS, or upon a consummate scholar, capable, we will say, of thinking in Ionic Greek,—but to make upon Englishmen or Americans of average culture an impression nearly identical with that which they derive from the Iliad itself. Such an aim does not appear too ambitious, but it has never been attained, rarely approached, in English. A radical error runs through all our metrical versions of the classic poets. Literal accuracy is by some repudiated, attempted by others, and occasionally achieved in detached passages, but is always subordinate to the attainment of harmonious numbers and an agreeable diction. Wherever literal accuracy seems likely to conflict with these it is sacrificed. Now, if it be true that such sacrifice is frequently inevitable, then a translation of the Iliad in English verse is an impossibility. But this we are reluctant to admit. The matchless version of VOSS has proved that it is possible to be at once literal and musical, to preserve in one Germanic language at least quite as much of the genuine Homeric flavor as those Germans who are likely to read translations can detect in the original. Perhaps a clue to his success is to be found in his employment of the hexameter. A profound artist, he could not fail to recognize the inextricable connection of rythm and caesura with the shape and play of thought. He saw that in some subtle sort the metre is the poem. We have not abandoned the hope of seeing the hexameter one day naturalized in English. Mr. KINGSLEY'S Andromeda showed a marked improvement upon Evangeline and what the laureate might do in this way is sufficiently clear from his "Ode to Milton," where he has grappled successfully with alcaics, undoubtedly the most intricate and difficult of dactylic measures. The distinction between quantitative and accentual metres has been pressed too far by men who have wanted patience to cope with those peculiarities which render our language somewhat intractable to dactylic verse.

Almost every familiar scheme of English metre has been applied to the reproduction of HOMER. We have had CHAPMAN'S fourteen-syllable line, the rhymed couplet of POPE and SOTHEBY, the unrhymed pentameter of COWPER, Mr. WORSLEY'S Spenserian stanza, the ballad movement, in seven beats, of Mr. NEWMAN, and many more. One or two of these are noble English poems, but as translations none can be compared with the work of VOSS. We should have said, before the appearance of Mr. BRYANT'S volume, that a new version of the Iliad executed upon one of the old plans and in one of the old meters, was not called for. The attempt of Lord DERBY to vie with COWPER in blank verse had proved singularly unfortunate. Failing to accredit the scholar, its publication belittled the statesman. It is not with such a performance that the Conservative Party can match Mr. GLADSTONE'S Homeric Age. We should not highly commend Mr. BRYANT were we to say that he is every way more successful than Lord DERBY. He has, in our judgment, surpassed COWPER, and that was no easy task. The associations, indeed, connected with what is known as blank verse, render it to an English ear somewhat unsuitable to a poem like the Iliad which presents an infinite variety of incidents and situations quite as often trivial as dignified. Still COWPER, although his muse, stooping to certain homely details, discovers a sort of prudishness which is highly amusing, is generally vigorous and noble where energy and majesty are required, and has hitherto been the least unsatisfactory of HOMER'S English translators. In examining the twelve books which Mr. BRYANT has submitted to the public, we shall mainly confine ourselves to a collation of COWPER and VOSS. We have neither space nor inclination to quote from the rhymed versions. Faithfully to reproduce HOMER in rhyme was declared by POPE to be impossible, and Mr. WORSLEY'S Odyssey, delightful as it is, has not availed to set aside the judgment.

It would be easy to misinterpret the views which have governed Mr. BRYANT'S work by his application of Latin names to the Homeric deities, and the reason which he assigns in the preface for this practice. We think him unquestionably wrong, and to our mind the error is serious and far-reaching. The denizens of HOMER'S Olympus are in the strictest sense personal gods. Such superhuman attributes as they severally possess are sharply defined, the degree and scope of their authority, except, perhaps, in two instances, clearly marked. They live the life of men, eat, drink, love, quarrel. They exhibit the most passionate interest in the war which rages before Ilium. They are bitter and unscrupulous partisans, wheedle, lie, bargain, rebel in the cause of their protégés. They forsake their dwellings to take part in the debates of mortals, rain in the fight, are pierced with spears, and the celestial ichor flows precisely like human blood. In short, they resemble rather the demigods of a later mythology, and are rarely invested with that awful sublimity and mystery which enshroud most of the older Roman divinities. Even in the Theogony of HESIOD the attributes of certain gods have undergone a degree of alteration which it is tax enough to bear in mind. To insist upon confounding Ares, Aphroditê and Athene with Mars, Venus and Minerva—deities which, as enshrined in the literature purely and distinctively Latin, are as native and peculiar to Rome as her language—is to mystify and annoy the reader who knows anything of either. It appears to us as unreasonable, and nearly as fatal to re-name the gods as to unnail the heroes of Iliad. Surely it is no apology for the confusion of things essentially distinct that the practice has been in some sort naturalized in our literature. So are the legendary chronicles of the Kings of Rome, so are the distorted portraits of SHAKESPEARE'S histories. A manifest absurdity cannot plead undisturbed possession. Moreover, it is now many years since English scholars have labored to educate their countrymen up to something like discrimination between the Greek and Latin mythologies. Their task is well-nigh done. LEMPRIERE'S Dictionary has long been obsolete, and the volumes of GROTE are in the hands of every schoolboy. If the prevailing excellence of Mr. BRYANT'S translation had not disarmed us, we should be disposed to protest in the name of American scholarship, against this tenth repetition of an exploded error, as well as against the presumption of national ignorance by which it is excused. It is certainly matter of regret that such an objection should lie on the threshold of a work in most respects so sound and scholarlike.

The new version begins well:

O, Goddess! sing the wrath of Peleus' son,
Achilles; sing the deadly wrath that brought Woes numberless upon the Greeks, and swept
To Hades many a valiant soul, and gave
Their limbs a prey to dogs and birds of air.
For so had Jove appointed, from the time
When the two, Atreides, King of Men,
And great Achilles—parted first as foes.

Seven hexameters in eight lines of blank verse—certainly a remarkable instance of compression. Except θεά, νῦν (almost an expletive) and νῶϊ in κρείσσων (which, perhaps is, faintly suggested by "swept,") not a word of HOMER is omitted. Not a word is added; "birds of air" is an accurate translation of οἰωνοῖσι. "Parted first as foes" is exceedingly good. There is but one error—διός is rendered "great." To this word no moral attribute whatever is attached in the Homeric poems. It is equivalent to "high born" or "noble" (as COWPER gives it) in the primitive sense of that word. Lord DERBY, and likewise Mr. NEWMAN, make it "god-like," which is absurd. If there be a fault in the lines just quoted, it is their coldness. They hardly lift us to the height of the great argument. But for close fidelity to the text of the original, these lines have not been approached in English, and are in this respect quite equal to VOSS. Hear, for instance, COWPER, who requires an extra line:

Achilles sing, O Goddess, Peleus' son,
His wrath pernicious, who ten thousand woes
Caused to Achaia's host, sent many a soul
Illustrious into Ades premature
And heroes gave (so stood the will of Jove),
To dogs and to all ravening birds a prey,
When fierce dispute had separated once
The noble chief Achilles from the son
Of Atreus, Agamemnon, King of men.

This is pitched in the right key, although the finest line, the fourth, is, perhaps, too suggestively Miltonic. In his scholarship COWPER is loose. "Who" is grammatically wrong, and æsthetically a blunder. It is not Achilles, but Achilles' wrath that HOMER means to sing. "Host," "ravening," "fierce," "chief," "Agamemnon," are mere supernumeraries. "Illustrious" was inserted, we presume, for rythmical reasons. It does not translate ἡρώων. "Stood" for ἐτέλειετο is fine. Mr. BRYANT fails to convey the notion of fulfillment, of inevitable accomplishment which the word seems to carry. The antithesis between ψυχὰς and αὐτοὺς significant in regards the Homeric theory of a future life, is quite lost in COWPER, while it is cleverly projected in Mr. BRYANT'S lines. "Premature" well renders the force of the preposition in προΐαψεν which ought not to be overlooked.

It may be well now to quote Lord DERBY. He needs ten lines:

Of Peleus' son, Achilles, sing, O Muse,
The vengeance deep and deadly whence to Greece
Innumbered ills arose, which many a soul
Of mighty warriors to the viceless Shades
Untimely sank, they on the battle plain
Unburied lay, a prey to ravening dogs
And carrion birds, but so had Jove decreed,
From that sad day when first in sordid war
The mighty Agamemnon, King of men,
Confronted stood by Peleus' godlike Son.

This is hardly worth criticising in detail. First, why "Muse?" "Vengeance" is bald for μῆνις. "Deadly" translates οὐλομένην well enough, but "deep and deadly" recalls the harrowing phraseology of the Ledger romance. "Viceless shades" is possibly poetry, but HOMER chooses to be geographical. He says Ais: "They on the battle plain unburied;" we cannot find this in the Greek, but it accounts for one extra line. "Ravening" and "carrion" raise COWPER'S expletive to the second power. "Sad day!" And so it was. But to call it so is almost maudlin. Ἐείδω does indeed mean to wrangle, but "wordy war" is petty and poetaster. "The mighty Agamemnon"—HOMER is satisfied with "Atrides." And now we will see if it be possible to give this magnificent prologue measure for measure, line for line, (almost) word for word. Hear VOSS.

"Singe den zorn, O Gottin, des Peleiaden
Achilleus
Ihn der entbrannt den Achaiern unenbaren jammer errichte
Und viel tapfere seelen der heldensöhne zum
Aïs
Sendete, aber die selber zum raub' ausstreckte den hunden
Und den gevögel umher—so ward Zeus wille vollendet—
Seit dem 'tag als einst durch bittern zank sich entzweiten
Atreus sohn der herscher des volks und der edle
Achilleus."

The figurative enthrannt for οὐλομένην is not to our taste. Bittern is superfluous, and sendete imperfectly translates προΐαψεν. Otherwise these lines are flawless.

We pass to the sixth book, to a passage which POPE and CHAPMAN have done well, SOTHEBY on the whole better, where even HOMERS grows tender, where every translator has sought to do his best. The parting of Hektor and Andromache is a scene unique in classic literature. When we consider the state of society depicted in the Homeric poems, the figure of Andromache is anomalous and inexplicable. Or, rather, she almost constrains us to recast our notions of the social framework in which we find her set. In her the sexual passion is refined and sublimated to that noblest form of conjugal love which is thought to be peculiar to the civilised and Christianized descendants from the chaste German stock. Through the historical ages of Greece, in the Roman Republic and Empire, we seek in vain a pendant to this portrait. The ideal would seem to have been lost. The painter who drew ALEXANDER'S mistress could not have limned Andromache; he who sang Ariadne, in Naxos, would have failed to understand her. To recover the type we must descend to a much later age—to RAPHAEL and to WORDSWORTH. The sweetest words in our language—sweetheart, helpmate, wife, describe Andromache. She is not the wanton idol of a despot's caprice, nor the dull victim of a convenient Athenian marriage, nor the selfish protégé of the cynical Roman law; she might have been bred in a Christian world, and blessed as Eve, ere the Lord Lord DERBY quote twenty lines from Mr. BRYANT:

She came attended by a maid, who bore
A tender child—a babe too young to speak—
Upon her bosom, Hektor's only son
Beautiful as a star. * * * * * *

The father on his child
Looked with a silent smile. Andromache
Pressed to his side meanwhile, and all in tears
Clung to his hand and thus beginning said,
"Too brave! thy valor yet will cause thy death!
Thou hast no pity on thy tender child
Nor on me, unhappy! who soon must be
Thy widow. All the Greeks yet will rush on thee
To take thy life. A happier lot were mine,
If I must lose thee, to go down to earth,
For I shall have no hope when thou art gone,
Nothing but sorrow. Father have I none,
And no dear mother. * * * * * *
Seven brothers had I in my father's house,
And all went down to Hades in one day.
* * * * * * *
Hector, thou
Art father and dear mother now to me,
And brother and my youthful spouse besides.

We confess that we conceived from a perusal of his preface grave doubts of Mr. BRYANT'S competence to execute a faithful translation of the Iliad. We read his work, and those doubts disappeared. No man, we imagine, who examines the lines just quoted, will question the accuracy of his scholarship. They are at once the most succinct, literal and beautiful reproduction of HOMER'S words which has been achieved in English. As Americans, we are proud of them. COWPER, indeed, had finely rendered this passage, and it may be that persons unfamiliar with the Greek and habituated to the movement of the Paradise Lost may prefer his inverted construction and sonorous periods. We will not quote him, however, but rather choose to pay Mr. BRYANT the highest homage in our power by placing beside his lines the version of VOSS:

Die dienerin aber ihr folgend
Trug an der brust das zarte, noch ganz unmündige knablein
Hektor's einzigen sohn, dem schimmernden sterne vergleichbar.
* * * * * * *
Sehe, mit lachein blickte der vater still auf
das knablein,
Aber neben ihn trat Andromache thranen vergiessend,
Drückt ihm freundlich die hand, und redete,
also bekennend:
"Schlimmer! dein mann, dich tödtet dein muth noch
und du erbarmst dich
Nicht des stammelnden kindes, noch mein des elenden weibes,
Ach, bald witwe von dir, denn dich tödten gewiss die Achaier
Alle mit massbat anstürmend; allein mir wäre
besser
Deiner beraubt in die erde hinabzusinken; denn weiter
Bleibt kein trost mir übrig, wenn du dein schicksal erreichst hast, Gram nur und nicht mehr hab ich ja vater und liebende mutter.
* * * * * * *
Sieben auch waren die brüder mir dort in unserer wohnung
Und die wandelten all' am selbigen tage zum Aïs
* * * * * * *
Hektor, o du bist jeso mir vater und liebende mutter
Auch mein bruder allein, o du mein blühende gatte!"

We doubt if these lines can be surpassed, except by the Greek itself. They echo the melody of HOMER. Mr. BRYANT, of course, relinquished all hope of competing with him in this respect, when he adopted iambic verse. In point of compression, however, and literal accuracy we shall find him not inferior. "Tender" (zarte) may perhaps stand for ἁπαλόχροος, although it represents but partially that exquisite epithet. COWPER omits this word altogether, and Lord DERBY substitutes something of his own "all unconscious." To our mind, Mr. BRYANT'S "too young to speak" is most felicitous for νήπιος αὖσα. The word, however, in many passages of the Iliad, shows no trace of relation to ἔος, and means simply "under age," as VOSS gives it. The force of the adverb is nicely preserved in the German. Both versions make ἀγαυοῖσι "only" (einzigen.) The line (Od. B. 3, 305) seems to us conclusive against the propriety of this translation. We prefer COWPER'S "darling." And now we come to the famous simile, ἀστέρι εἰδομένον πάλαι. Mr. BRYANT, following COWPER, writes, "beautiful as a star." But HOMER is far more picturesque than this. He shows us the bright cheeks and glancing eyes of Hektor's boy, gleaming from his nurse's bosom as a star gleams. "A fair star," Lord DERBY would make it a planet, "morning star" he calls it. But stars that twinkle and glimmer are most alluring to the eye, and, therefore, VOSS is right—"Schimmernden sterne vergleichbar." Mr. BRYANT is not successful in the next line, we cannot like "silent smile." Neither can VOSS match COWPER'S "The father silent eyed his babe and smiled." "Pressed to his side" is vivid where COWPER and VOSS are tame. "Clung to his hand"—the Greek is "γρεῦ on his hand." VOSS was certainly drowsy when he could render this "pressed fondly his hand." Andromache's first word is quite lost in the "Dear Lord" of Lord DERBY'S version. COWPER'S "My noble Hector," is even worse. The truth is that Δαιμόνιε is uttered by the young wife in tender reproach, and this is conveyed in some measure by "too brave," but "Seltsamer mann" is perfect. "Tender" child, COWPER and Lord DERBY write, "helpless." VOSS' "Stammelnden" is based, we presume, on Il. 2, 332, where some command of speech, more or less articulate, seems to be conceded to νηπιάχοις. The next four lines of the new version are close and felicitous, but θάλαμος is not so much "hope" as "comfort," and "when thou art gone," hardly expresses the thought in ἐπεὶ δὲ σὺ γ' οἴχῃ ἀτέκνος, whereas the Germandeliver it faithfully. We have reached finally a wonderful couplet which fairly throbs with passionate devotion. Here is the Greek:

"Ἕκτορ ἀτὰρ σύ μοι ἐσσὶ πατὴρ καὶ πότνια μήτηρ
Ἠδ' κασίγνητος, σὺ δὲ μοι θαλερὸς θαλάμοιο."

Which, perhaps, might be rendered thus:

Hektor, united in thee still find I my worshipful mother,
Father and brother in thee. Oh blooming Hektor, my husband.

VOSS' is exceedingly sweet:

Hektor o du best jezo mir vater und liebende mutter,
Auch mein bruder allein, O du mein blühende gatte.

DERBY:

But Hector thou to me art all in one,
Sire, mother, brethren, thou my wedded love.

COWPER:

Yet Hector, oh my husband, I in thee,
Find parents, brothers, all that I have lost.

BRYANT:

Hector, thou
Art father and dear mother now to me,
And brother, and my youthful spouse besides.

Lord DERBY'S version is curiously bad. Strange that one striving to utter to English ears words which in the Iliad seem to break from the heart should go out of his way for "sire" and "brethren!" As for "wedded love," it is not only incorrect, but mawkish, and therefore in this place detestable. COWPER likewise is weak and false. "Parents" is intolerable, πάτηρ and θαλαμος are overlooked. And in exchange for those adjectives we have "All that I have lost." (pure COWPER.) Mr. BRYANT does much better, but he is again somewhat cold, and coldness here is hardly pardonable. He was determined to give the last line literally, but to put πότνια in the vocative as VOSS has done makes the verse faithful enough, and more glowing. Both VOSS and Mr. BRYANT are wrong in ἐσσί. The active participle "liebende" is out of the question, and even "dear" conveys an erroneous impression of the relations existing between parent and child in the Homeric age. Φίλος predicates a sentiment of respect and reverence, and is associated with the names of deities. For an exact analogue we must go back to English domestic life of the last century. We shall find it in Richardson. We quote twenty lines from Mr. BRYANT:

[illegible] mother." We grant to Lord DERBY the justice to say that he has hit upon this translation in line 413. It is a pity that he did not repeat it here. Θάρσει, has proved a stumbling block to some translators. It is a beautiful word, and placed with exquisite propriety in the mouth of a young wife who gazes on the bravest face and noblest form of Ilium. Mr. BRYANT'S "youthful" is not absolutely wrong, but it is rather the impression which youth and health make upon the eye, their visible glory, their "purple light," which HOMER marks in θαλερὸς. Blithe de gives it exactly. We wish that, with these perfect words, Andromache might have vanished from literature. The later myths dishonor her. It seems a crime against nature to recount of this woman that—and that Hector's widow bore children to the son of Achilles. Surely, instinct would have taught her the tenet of a later philosophy: "We are in the power of no calamity while death is in our own." Not in EURIPIDES and VIRGIL, but rather in RACINE would we follow the fortunes of that Andromache whom we knew by the Scaean gate.

Victoria hart tetiait captiva cubile,

We pass to our last quotation. We have chosen the concluding lines of the eighth book, not so much because they are familiar to most readers, but because they have been translated by Mr. TENNYSON. It may be interesting to contrast his version.

Mr. BRYANT writes:

So high in hope they sat the whole night through
In warlike mood, and many watch-fires blazed.
As when in heaven the stars look brightly forth
Round the clear-shining moon, while not a breeze
Stirs in the depths of air, and all the stars
Are seen, and gladness fills the shepherd's heart,
So many fires in sight of Ilium blazed,
Lit by the sons of Troy between the ships
And eddying Xanthus; on the plain there shone
A thousand; fifty warriors by each fire
Sat in its light. Their steeds beside the ears,
Champing their oats and their white barley, stood
And waited for the golden morn to rise.

Mr. TENNYSON renders the same passage thus:

And these all night upon the ridge of war
Sat glorying; many a fire before them blazed:
As when in heaven the stars about the moon
Look beautiful, when all the winds are laid.
* * * * * * *
* * * * * * *
* * * and all the stars
Shine and the shepherd gladdens in his heart.
So many a fire between the ships and stream
Of Xanthus blazed before the towers of Troy.
A thousand on the plain; and close by each
Sat fifty in the blaze of burning fire;
And eating hoary grain and pulse the steeds
Stood by their cars waiting the throned morn.

We prefer the general effect of the Laureate's lines, but our American version adheres quite as closely to the text. We are surprised, however, to find "warlike lines," Mr. TENNYSON'S alternative translation "ridge of war" is an exact reproduction of ἐν πτολέμου γεφύρῃ "Bridge," which he first wrote, is post-Homeric. Lord DERBY'S phrase is close enough, but wanting in pictorial power.

Full of proud hopes upon the pass of war,
All night they camped and frequent blazed their fires.

If one care to see what sad work may proceed from a true poet, here is COOPER'S version of these lines:

Big with great purposes and proud they sat,
Not disarrayed, but in fair form displayed
Of even ranks, and watched their numerous fires.

Ten words are here required to misconstrue three, and meantime πανύχιοι an essential point in the narrative, is wholly omitted. The simile of the moon and stars is sharply and faithfully reproduced by Mr. BRYANT. "Look beautiful" for φαίνετ' ἀριπρεπέα seems to us both loose and weak. "All the winds are laid"—COWPER says "hushed." Either is better than Mr. BRYANT'S phrase, for "depths" is a mere parasite. Lord DERBY'S translation of πάντα δὲ τ' ἄστρα ἄστρα δέρκε is ambitious and obtrusive. "Shines each particular star distinct." The last six hexameters are given in seven lines of our version, Mr. TENNYSON has compressed them into six, but at the sacrifice of Τρῶων κασίγνητοι which is neatly expressed by "lit by the sons of Troy." We could have dispensed with Ilium's "towers," but are delighted to find θρώσκω preserved in "throned."

Here we take leave of Mr. BRYANT. We took up his Iliad, as we have said, in a spirit of doubt and prejudice. We lay it down with respect and gratitude. In scrupulous adherence to the text this version has no rival in our language, and ought, in justice, to be compared with VOSS. In point of scholarship COWPER showed himself much stronger than POPE, but his work beside Mr. BRYANT'S Homer, seems to us a paraphrase. Both are masters of blank verse, but COWPER is a pupil of MILTON, while Mr. BRYANT'S diction and rhythm are his own. The iambic pentameter is in his hands surprisingly plastic. We did not suppose it capable of such happy adjustment to the shifting mood and varying pitch of the original. Yet we cannot help a regret that this version was not executed in hexameters. We are disposed to think that this achievement was possible to the author of this translation.

It must be admitted that Mr. BRYANT'S lines are rarely invested with the impassioned fervor and glowing life which have rescued the works of some of his predecessors from oblivion. But it will generally be found that where they are most spirited, they are least Homeric. It is inevitable that a conscientious workman who resolves to copy his model in its minutest details will produce at times a mosaic rather than a cast*ing*, that his materials will appear pieced and not fused. But we are sure that the sweetness of Mr. BRYANT'S verse will delight the general reader, while scholars will appreciate his self-control. Animation is desirable, but fidelity is indispensable, and they who truly love the Iliad, will prefer HOMER in marble to POPE and CHAPMAN in the flesh.

Right Rev. Dr. POTTER, Bishop of New-York, administered the rite of Confirmation yesterday morning at the Church of St. John the Baptist, Lexington-avenue, corner of Thirty-fifth-street, to a number of young persons of both sexes. Owing to the prevailing storm, the church was not so well filled as it would otherwise have been, nor was the number of candidates for the rite as large as was expected.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—MARCH 12.

Before Judges Woodruff and Blatchford.

THE FULLERTON CASE—DECLARATIONS OF CO-CONSPIRATORS—DISTRICT ATTORNEY FULLERTON'S ARGUMENT.

The following is Ex-Judge Pierrepont's argument in full in behalf of "admitting the declarations of co-conspirators."

Mr. Pierrepont offered the letter of Belknap of 8th June, 1869, which was objected to by Mr. Stoughton.

Mr. Pierrepont—Before I read it, your Honors please, after having given this letter much consideration, before it was offered, that whenever the attention of the Court was properly called to what I call the legal effect of the contents of the portion of the case, that the Court must come to the conclusion that this letter is admissible as originally evidence. I think I will be able, in a brief while, so to present your Honors with the reasons which, on all these views, unless the learned counsel shall bring some argument which shall show that these views are unsound, I offer this as legitimate evidence in the case. The charge of the conspiracy, and I call your Honors' attention to the date first—June 8, 1869, and this I deem very important in the consideration of this question. Your Honors will remember I was endeavoring to read the evidence, that just prior to the writing of this letter, Mr. Osborn was called to Mr. Fullerton's office, where he met Belknap with Mr. Fullerton, and where they had conversation, and that they then came on the subject of issuing warrants, and on the subject of issuing them with secrecy, and on the subject of the power which Mr. Osborn then had to issue warrants, and on the question of how many warrants, without allowing the District Attorney to know the fact that he had issued them; and whether he had the power to deputize a person to serve the warrants, if he did issue them. Now all these subjects were discussed between these parties prior to the writing of this letter, and immediately following these discussions this letter was written. Now let us see what it is.

Judge Woodruff—The Court have read the letter, and are quite familiar with its contents.

Mr. Pierrepont—I will not read it, but will simply refer to it, as the Court have read it. You will remember what I said in this letter is referred to by Kosenlski, and the desire to have him report to Belknap, the writer of this letter, and not report to the District Attorney, or any other person, in connection with this. Then we take this letter, written immediately after these conversations, in which the plan was laid and the suggestions made, and the instructions given, that no warrants for the arrest could be issued secretly, without the knowledge of the District Attorney, without their being made open, and without the knowledge of the Marshal; this letter was written, and the very process of getting the report made by Kosenlski to the writer of this letter instead of their being made to District Attorney Tracy, and then it further goes on to say that he will come to New-York, and in this case as in another, which I need not mention, because your Honors know what it is—that is, to "report to me directly and not under any instructions;" and then it goes further that the control of the important movements, which will culminate in a few days, must be controlled by myself alone. Well, what were these important movements that were to culminate in a few days? Why, Mr. Osborn had told you that the movements were that warrants culminate in a few days, in which he says that Belknap told him he had a bushel of affidavits. In this conversation, the result of which was that Mr. Osborn was to be the agent of secrecy was that Mr. Courtney had not the confidence of the Secretary of the Treasury, or rather, had no confidence in the then District Attorney. The evidence on this subject you have heard, and I shall have occasion in the progress of this case, to comment upon it. The evidence of the Secretary of the Treasury, given yesterday, you remember. When you think that in connection with this interview with Mr. Osborn, the plan there suggested, the reason then given, which is proved not to be true, and then this letter immediately following, I submit to your Honors, that this is proper evidence to go to the jury upon the question of the conspiracy. Now it seems to me that the law on the subject is very clear, and I will read your Honors attention to the case in 7 Cowan, 456, in which Chief-Justice Savage gave the opinion, the case of Jones vs. Eaton. There had been a disposition of the case on the question of hearsay, and on the admission of evidence, and the decision of the Court was reversed.

Chief-Justice Savage says: "As to satisfactory proof of conspiracy in the case of King vs. Cope et al., reported

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

The fatal duel between the DUC DE MONTPENSIER and Prince HENRI DE BOURBON, was fought within seven miles of the walls of Madrid. The first fire was exchanged at ten paces without effect. At seven paces the Prince, who had won the privilege of firing first, missed the Duc, and the latter shot him through the head. He expired in a few moments. The Duc has taken upon himself the support of the family of the Prince, who is represented to have died poor. The quarrel grew out of a political letter written by the Prince to the friends of the Duc....Carlists are reported to be entering Spain notwithstanding the vigilance on both sides of the frontier. An inquiry in the Cortes on Saturday as to the truth of a statement that Gen. PRIM had made overtures for the sale of Cuba to the United States, elicited a denial from the Minister. In answer to another relating to the extension of political privileges to Cuba, it was replied that the time had not yet arrived, and the troubles in the island had not ended....The death of Count MONTALEMBERT is announced by telegraph from Paris. He was in his sixtieth year....The Ex-Queen of Spain and her husband, Don FRANCISCO D'ASSIS, have agreed to lay their difficulties before a tribunal, to be composed of five persons, one of whom is to be JULES FAVRE....An explanation is soon to be made by the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, that the demand for representation was not on account of the dogma of infallibility, but because the schema seemed to involve the relations of Church and State. The French troops in Rome are designed to protect the territorial rights and not the religious claims of the Holy See. The London journals regard the French note to Rome as a diplomatic error, made by OLLIVIER, acting under the advice of JULES FAVRE. A bill is in preparation by the Cabinet to enforce the laws in Ireland. It will empower the Lord Lieutenant to proclaim districts in disturbance, within which extraordinary powers are to be granted to Magistrates after the proclamation. In certain cases Police and jury trials will be dispensed with.

GENERAL.

Havana advices are to the effect that Gen. GOICOURIA, and some of his followers, have escaped from Camaguey and have gone towards Las Tunas. One hundred insurgents are reported to have been killed recently in the vicinity of Trinidad. A Judge in the city, having, as it is claimed, illegally released the Masons who were imprisoned, has been placed by Captain-General DE RODAS in the Morro Castle, and the Masons have been ordered to report themselves, as under arrest, at the City Jail.

Admiral POOR, writing from Cape Haytien Feb. 12, notifies the Navy Department of his arrival at that port, and of an interview with the Provisional Government, in which he stated that while negotiations were pending between this country and San Domingo, the United States was determined to prevent any interference on the part of Hayti or of any other Government with the Dominicans. The Haytien authorities are reported to be displeased with what they consider a menace on the part of our Government accompanied with force.

Advices from New-Mexico represent the Indians as quiet. Some of them accepted the farming implements distributed by the agents, but others declined because there were not enough to make each man a present, and dissatisfaction would follow.

Some of the Texas indemnity bonds, indorsed by the United States, have been permitted to go to protest on the ground that by the decision in the case of "Texas vs. Hunn and Chilton," they are not negotiable, and will be paid in Texas.

Twelve thousand dollars were stolen from the Albany City Bank on Saturday, which the owner had left on a desk for a moment, while he stepped into another room. Information of the robbery was immediately given to a detective officer, who soon after arrested two men from Greenbush and recovered the money.

Among our law reports, this morning, will be found District Attorney PIERREPONT'S argument in full in advocacy of the admission in evidence in the Fullerton case of BELKNAP'S letter, in which mention is made of FULLERTON'S alleged complicity with him in certain transportation operations.

The old Sixth Massachusetts Regiment will this year celebrate the anniversary of its passage through Baltimore, Md., (April 19, 1861,) at Worcester, as one company of the regiment was from that city.

Fifteen hundred bills and joint resolutions have been introduced in both branches of Congress up to the present time.

The citizens of San Francisco are getting up a memorial to Congress to subsidize a steamship line between that city and Australia.

The passengers of the wrecked steamer Eagle arrived at Norfolk, Va., on Wednesday night. Two wrecking tugs have gone to Body Island to the assistance of the vessel, and it is hoped that she will be taken off the bar and saved. The personal effects of the passengers and $200,000 in gold, were safely landed at the time they were put on shore.

The Funding Bill Unacceptable to the Country.

The Funding bill, as it passed the Senate, is not received with much favor in Wall-street, nor is it likely to be acceptable to the country at large, unless very materially changed in the House of Representatives. The objectionable features relate to the variety of new bonds proposed to be created; to the large annual and perpetual appropriation of one hundred and fifty millions for gold interest and payment of principal; to the increase of the permanent gold bearing debt by funding the greenbacks, and to the substitution of a further issue of national bank notes for greenbacks, to be canceled at the same time. These are the popular exceptions to the bill. The national bank people make the further objection that they ought not to be compelled to substitute 4 and 5 per cents for their present 6 per cent. securities, without being relieved of the present tax of one per cent. per annum on their circulation.

It seems probable that the bill, after its reference by the House of Representatives to the Committee of Ways and Means or the Committee on Banking and Currency, will not be heard of again for several weeks, and it would therefore be folly for the trading or banking community to pause in their business movements on account of this measure. We have not the slightest belief that any thing will be ultimately done by Congress, in the present temper of the House of Representatives, to sanction the contraction of the currency, or to precipitate specie payments upon the Treasury or the national banks before they are fully prepared to make such a measure easy to the public, and entirely successful, beyond the possibility of a reasonable doubt, to themselves.

The purpose and views of President GRANT about reducing the annual charge upon the public debt, so as to authorize a liberal reduction of taxation, are directly postponed, if not wholly defeated, by this measure. He would reduce the gold interest on the debt below one hundred millions, leaving a margin on that sum almost if not quite equal, to an annual sinking fund which would extinguish the new stocks about to be created at low rates in less than forty years. Mr. SHERMAN, adhering to his own preposessions against all sinking funds, would entail the heavy charge of $150,000,000 in gold per annum on the Customs revenues, for interest and in diminution of the principal. The annual difference to the tax payers is nearly equal to the sum which the President would relieve them of as soon as refunding at low rates of interest is an accomplished fact.

Aside from the head of the Administration, we are far from believing that the bill is left in an acceptable shape to the Secretary of the Treasury. He has not urged any new arrangement of the sinking fund policy, and least of all, one that would entail an annual charge for interest and principal calculated to defeat or indefinitely postpone all hope of lightening the burden of taxation. Nor can he really desire to call in our greenback legal tender circulation, floated free of cost to the Government, and to the entire acceptance of the country, beyond an amount that may seem to be needful when we more nearly approach the specie standard than we are likely to do at present. In the assumed event of specie payments, there would be no real necessity for the withdrawal of greenbacks beyond their return upon the Treasury for gold in the ordinary course of business. The fact is, they would then be equal to $400,000,000 or $500,000,000 of so much gold, and as an acceptable and most convenient substitute for gold in the receipts for Customs and internal taxes, the redemption of national bank notes, and the payments for interest on the public debt.

Coddling the Freedmen.

We trust that we fully appreciate the vast wrong which has hitherto been perpetrated upon the negro of the South through slavery, and that we recognize as clearly as possible the resulting obligation of the nation toward him. We admit that he is a ward of the Government, and that he should be treated in all respects as such—that the strong arm of the law should be thrown around him, to protect him in all his newly acquired rights and, if necessary, to aid him reasonably in his sharp social and political transition. But we would do all this discreetly, and in such a way as to encourage his self-assertion, and as speedily as possible to fit him for the industrial competitions which sooner or later he must encounter.

When emancipation was first bestowed upon him, the freedman was a legitimate object of public charity. He was dazed with sudden freedom, and without the knowledge or the means of support or self protection. His old master turned him adrift and made him worse than a pauper. In the emergency the Freedmen's Bureau was a beneficent and humane device. It came between the freedmen and starvation, and served to tide him over the interval of material prostration and stagnation of all enterprise at the South, which followed immediately after the war. In this helpless condition he needed to be treated as a child, and not only saved from death by disease and starvation, but to be taught that freedom was a different and a more exalted condition than pauperism.

Direct material aid from the Government could only be properly extended to the freedmen as a temporary expedient of mercy. Beyond that it became a curse, and it was very wisely withdrawn as speedily as possible. The greatest boon to be conferred upon the freedman was to educate him in the school of practical effort, to the standard of free labor, and to make him win his own bread, and exercise the providence which his former condition had almost obliterated from his nature. It was hard to learn, but once learned, it was the most substantial boon he could receive, simply because it put him, nearer than any thing else could, upon an economic equality with the whites.

A broad spirit of philanthropy, and a true regard for the permanent welfare of the freedmen, are in opposition to the spirit of coddling which occasionally crops out in Congress. All special legislation in their behalf—beyond the protection of their equal rights in all things before the law—is a mistaken kindness. It pauperizes and degrades them by paralyzing the truest and highest incentive to effort. As such we regard the bill recently introduced in Congress to distribute the public lands in the Southern States to the negro in sections of forty acres. The insuperable objection to the bill lies in its exclusive provision for negroes. We do not seriously object to the free donation of such small tracts for homesteads, under proper restrictions against speculation—although we incline to the opinion that a sale at the uniform rate of a dollar and a quarter an acre would be preferable—but we would make no limitation as to color. We would throw the land in question open to all alike. The "poor whites" are as worthy of consideration as the freedmen, and so are the emigrants from other countries.

By enlarging the scheme to this extent, the best interests of the freedmen would not only be more effectually served, but the solution of the great problem of Southern development would be expedited by multiplying the number of land proprietors, and ultimately breaking up the great estates out of which grew that spirit of aristocracy and caste which has been the bane of Southern civilization. Hence we say, "Stop coddling the negroes."

A Strange Affair.

Our readers must be familiar with the sight of "the Alexander Mystery" in our news columns, for it has appeared there at intervals for nearly two months past. The circumstances surrounding the case are in all respects mysterious and unusual. Let us briefly recall them to the attention of the public. JOHN ALEXANDER was a retired sea Captain, aged seventy-four, and worth, as some supposed, about $60,000. It was believed that he had this money invested in United States bonds, and that he kept the bonds suspended in two bags which hung round his neck. He had but one relative, a daughter named Mrs. BURKE, then resident in New-Orleans—the old man himself residing in this City, in a boarding house kept by Mr. and Mrs. GARDINER.

On the 26th of March, 1869, Capt. ALEXANDER died, and the physician who attended him (Dr. BROCKAWAY) gave a certificate to the effect that death resulted from old age and softening of the brain. The GARDINERS declared that the Captain had left eight thousand dollars in bonds to them, as a reward for their attentions to him in his illness. He had no other property. Mrs. BURKE was dissatisfied with their account of the circumstances attending her father's death, and demanded an inquiry. Coroner FLYNN accordingly ordered the body to be exhumed, and arrested Mr. and Mrs. GARDINER, and a servant girl named ROSE KING, pending the investigation.

The task of analyzing the contents of the dead man's stomach was intrusted to Dr. DOREMUS, and after an interval of about six weeks, the inquiry before the Coroner was resumed. Dr. DOREMUS testified that he could find no poison, or trace of poison, in the man's remains, and medical evidence was called to prove that softening of the brain, and nothing else, was the cause of death. No additional evidence whatever was brought against the GARDINERS. It seemed, therefore, that the charge against them had completely fallen to the ground: but, strange to say, the servant girl—both of them said to be advanced in pregnancy—were sent back to prison, and bail was refused.

We know that murderers caught red handed have found no difficulty in getting our Coroners to admit them to bail before now, and this rigorous treatment of two persons who were only arrested on mere suspicion, and against whom nothing has been proved, would alone justify our calling attention to the case. We may take it for granted that when the GARDINERS are restored to liberty, not much of their eight thousand dollars will be left. It is a most extraordinary feature in the case that ROSA KING, the servant who had assisted to wait on Mr. GARDINER, has disappeared. On Saturday Mrs. GARDINER made this statement: "If you will allow me to speak, I will state that ROSE told me, in the court-yard, that Dr. SHINE had discharged her." Dr. SHINE is the Deputy Coroner. Coroner FLYNN himself said to the counsel for the prisoners, who demanded their liberation on the ground that no poison had been found, "You have heard the Professor testify that there are many poisons that can be used and leave no trace, so your objection falls to the ground." Any man alive might be sent to the gallows on negative evidence of this kind. Coroner FLYNN says, in effect, "No poison was found, but still the GARDINERS may have used poison; therefore I will hold them in custody until they can prove their innocence." There is a strong flavor of the middle ages about this kind of justice. Coroner's Courts have often been the means of introducing curious precedents to our notice. What are we to think of this new one of Coroner FLYNN'S? And now what is to be the next move in this most curious prosecution? What excuse is there for keeping in close confinement two persons whose innocence appears to be clearly established?

British Criticism and British Precedent.

The London Times, in supporting the late decision of the Supreme Court of the United States,—that Congress had not the power to apply the provisions of this act to pre-existing debts,—suggests that individual foreign creditors of the respective States of the Union may now proceed in the United States Courts to enforce the collection of the differences between coin and paper on the payments of principal and interest accepted under protest. A party who accepts payment of a debt in bank notes, whether he protests or not, waives his right to any legal remedies. This is the law in England as well as here. But it is surprising that the Times should remain in ignorance of the specific provision of the national constitution, that no State shall be liable to suit in the Courts of the United States on the part of "citizens of another State, or citizens or subjects of any foreign State." This alone settles the question adversely to the proceedings suggested.

The London journal also runs into the common mistake of supposing that the Legal Tender act was intended to apply to the debts of individual States. It is mainly an interior arrangement, applicable to proceedings for the collection of individual and corporate debts. To plead a legal tender is part of the machinery of suits, and it is an error to suppose that this applies to the United States Government, or to States which cannot be sued. This error—due in great part to the loose phraseology of the act—constitutes the foundation of the repudiation doctrines lately put forth by the Democratic Convention of Indiana. The obligation of the Government and of the several States to pay their bonds in coin was unaffected wholly by the scope and effect of the act of Congress.

Lord ELDON, in his day a high authority, said in support of the English bill passed in 1811, which made it a misdemeanor to accept, under any device or contrivance, gold at more than its nominal value, or a note of the Bank of England at less, that although he had the care of over twenty-five millions of the property of His Majesty's subjects he had not been able to collect a debt in any thing but Bank of England notes since the passage of the act of 1797. This act prevented the arrest of debtors who could show that they had tendered such notes. Yet the Times, with this example before it of what is necessary in war, expects that the Courts of the United States shall, during the dangers, turmoils and political and financial disturbances of war, discredit the money of the Government and peril the issue of the conflict by compelling coin payments.

Indeed, England is estopped, by the long continued example of its Government in the war with NAPOLEON, from insisting that this is not a necessity of war. The world was then informed by the most opulent nation known to ancient or modern history that the war had produced the hoarding of gold and its expulsion to nations not embroiled; that this misfortune prevented its use in the business relations of the people; and that consequently all persons who had contracted debts before the war contracted them with the implied understanding that they were not to be enforced in coin during the pendency of a mighty conflict, if the Government should find this to be necessary for the general safety. This is the spirit of every contract. It is no violation of the contract to say to a creditor that the Government cannot use its machinery of justice at such a time to compel an impossibility. If you want gold you must wait; the Government can only enforce payment in war in the money with which it is compelled by an overruling necessity to use. Governments, by an embargo, arrest instantaneously the performance of contracts between shippers. They do this also in a blockade. The principle of the Legal-tender fact is found in these admitted powers. The laws of war are supreme in war.

The long continued practice of the British Government with respect to the coin of the realm is another consideration which should restrain the Times from urging the course it recommends upon the United States. The silver pound sterling of England originally contained twelve ounces of silver and of the necessary alloy. It has been reduced from time to time to its present weight, which is about one third of what it originally contained. This depreciation was due to the necessities of the Government, which compelled public and private creditors to accept the debased currency.

Our Government, in an emergency at least equal to any which induced the English to set these two examples, followed the spirit of the one resorted to during the war with NAPOLEON, under a power as ample in the financial regulations for war as is possessed by any nation. If the United States could not exercise the power to prevent the refusal of its money at such a time, by those for whose benefit war is waged, it would be forever at the mercy of its enemies.

The English act of 1797 applied to pre-existing debts, and so did that of 1811, which required that goods distrained upon for rent should be delivered up on a tender of Bank of England notes, unless the landlord should allege that more was due. If this allegation could not be maintained, the landlord was obliged to surrender the goods and pay the costs. This was a direct interference with ancient leases, ever regarded in England as contracts of the most sacred character. True the act of 1811 reserved all other remedies; but it is well known that during, and for some years after the war, collections were made in legal proceedings in nothing but the notes of the Bank.

The intention of the appointing power in this country to fill the two vacant seats on the Bench of its Supreme Court with Judges whose antecedents agree with the loyalty which put down the rebellion, the Times stigmatizes as a blow at the integrity of the administration of justice. If, however, there were vacancies to be filled in any of the Courts of Judicature in England, and a decision had been made in a private suit which, if continued as authority, would strip the Government of an essential means of warfare and defense, would the public opinion of England tolerate the appointment of new Judges who would permanently cripple her power in war?

Inharmonious Responses.

The Columbia Phœnix and the Mobile Register respond to our suggestions in regard to the true policy to be pursued by the South, but in very different temper. The former frankly declares its acceptance of the political situation, and desires to unite with the good men of all sections in maintaining and guarding the liberties and industrial interests of all classes. It says: "We are disposed to temper with moderation our political and social intercourse with the North, and to realize the sense of a common destiny." Thereupon the Phœnix calls upon us to recognize ex-rebels as our peers, and not subordinate them to the blacks. To all this we reply, that our South Carolina contemporary has read these columns to very little purpose, if it is not aware that we have steadily urged upon the North the policy now tardily suggested by our contemporary. Still we can overlook the omission in view of the admirable temper of conciliation which it now evinces. It is in marked contrast with that displayed by the Mobile Register, which treats our suggestions as meddlesome and officious. It goes into a tirade of reproach and defiance identical with that which it indulged in before and during the war. It scornfully rejects all proffered magnanimity and amnesty by the North as coming five years too late, and likens it to a reprieve after the victim has been strangled on the scaffold. With all due respect to the Register, we beg leave to suggest that it is foolishly tenacious of its ancient venom, and that it can accomplish nothing by thus clinging to dead and buried issues. We shall accept the Columbia Phœnix as a far more reliable exponent of Southern sentiment than the Register.

Clearing Broadway.

We are told that some suggestions offered by us last Tuesday, with regard to clearing Broadway, are of an impracticable character. Dust cannot be laid in freezing weather, we are informed, because water then makes ice, and the remedy is worse than the disease. Thus we are to be choked with dust in Summer because water is scarce, and in Winter because it congeals. Furthermore we are instructed that the task of removing a heavy snow fall from Broadway is too great and too costly. It is cheaper to submit to the evil than to conquer it. The mischief done to health and temper, and the loss entailed on time, merchandise, clothes and shoe leather by letting snow and dirt lie are of less value than the money it would cost to cart them away. Finally it is impossible—so that the thing is not to be thought of.

The word impossible is not a good one for the vocabulary of a first-class municipality; but let us glance at these objections in detail. First, as regards laying the dust: A report on this subject has just been submitted by the Superintendent of street cleaning in Liverpool to the Health Committee of that city. This report gives a minute account of the trials made during the past year with what are called COOPER'S street watering salts. These substances have been used on the great thoroughfares of Lord, Church and Bold streets in the hottest period of Summer and in the coldest term of Winter. It is deemed that the test has consequently been as severe as it could be made. The Superintendent declares that the use of the salts has been entirely successful, and beyond comparison superior to plain water. The advantages derived from them consist in the small quantity of water needed, the great slowness of its evaporation, and the security against freezing except at very low temperatures. Practically, two water-carts with a weak solution of the salts were found equal to seven under the old system, and this upon macadamized roads. In paved streets one cart it is said will do the work of five working in the old way. Financially it is admitted that no saving is attained. But the salts have so far been used merely in experimental quantities. When employed on a large scale, as is intended, it is said there will be no addition in money cost over the usual plan, and a saving of seventy per cent. in water. When we remember the state of the Croton last Summer the importance of this is manifest. The salts are not hurtful to health, and trust in their efficacy has not depended on a single set of experiments. The system has been fairly tried in Greenock, and is reported upon quite as favorably as in Liverpool, by Mr. BAIRD, C. E., master of the works in the former city. Hence there appears no reason why COOPER'S, or some other similar chemical system, should not be adopted in New-York, with equally satisfactory results.

As regards removing the snow, it is simply a question of comparative economy. If the snow were likely to remain accumulated for some time as in by-gone days here, it might be wise to let it alone. In that case the street travel would be on runners, and the disagreeable and unhealthy infliction of a long thaw less frequent. But, whatever the cause, such snows are yearly more uncommon. And, the usual practice being to wait until the snow has caked and hardened into stubborn masses, and then to apply four times the labor to remove it that the process would have required at first, we adhere to our original suggestion. Broadway should be kept clear and sweet and pleasant to the feet, lungs and eyes at all times, and at any cost. We believe that every dollar so laid out will be repaid four-fold in purse and health to those who have to pay it.

Prison Reform.

Time out of mind the management of our State Prisons has been assailed, first in one quarter and then in another, and a great variety of schemes for reform have been devised and advocated. There is no doubt that a vast amount of jobbery and corruption has been practiced, in addition to much cruelty and impropriety. The reports of investigating Committees and of the Prison Reform Association abundantly prove this. How best and most effectually the evils attending the present system can be remedied, is a problem which all good citizens are anxious to solve. The latest device, and one which certainly looks plausible, is that just submitted by Senator CAULDWELL, of Westchester County. It is a proposition to amend the Constitution of the State by abolishing the present office of State Prison Inspectors and appointing in their stead a Board of five managers, to be nominated by the Governor and confirmed by the Senate, to hold for ten years, and to be so classified that one shall retire every two years. These managers shall have general charge and superintendency of all the prisons, county jails and other penal and reformatory institutions of the State, under such regulations as the Legislature shall prescribe; they shall serve without pay, except to reimburse reasonable expenses, and shall appoint all prison wardens, physicians, chaplains and clerks, and have the power of removing them for cause. All other officers of prisons are to be appointed by the wardens and removed by them at pleasure. From the accumulated testimony before us there seems to be a necessity for the adoption of the plan proposed, or a better one, if such can be devised.

Funding the debt has been urged on the ground that it would render possible a larger reduction of taxation. On that ground such a measure was recommended by the Convention which nominated Gen. GRANT, and subsequently by GRANT himself. The Sherman Funding bill, as it has passed the Senate, is intended to frustrate this wise purpose. It makes a continued charge of $150,000,000 annually on account of the debt, interest and principal, at least twenty-five millions in excess of the sum that should be required under both heads. For this reason alone we trust that the bill, in its present shape, will not be accepted by the House of Representatives.

Influential Republicans in Tennessee deprecate the talked of Congressional interference in the affairs of that State. They urge the intervention of Federal authority to secure greater respect for law,—and this demand the Administration will effectually meet. Kuklux thieves and murderers will now be restrained, with the help of United States soldiers. But the reopening of the relations of the State toward the General Government will be followed by much bitterness of feeling and much practical mischief. If the arm of the law is weak, let it be strengthened. But no encouragement should be given to a proposition which seeks to justify constant interference with restored States upon pretexts that would keep the whole Union everlastingly in hot water.

"We regard this fishery question with anxiety," says the Montreal Witness. That is the conclusion to which most sensible Canadians will probably come when they coolly calculate the tendencies of the policy which the Ottawa authorities have announced upon the subject. They may not unnaturally feel aggrieved by the failure of their attempts to re-establish advantageous commercial relations with this country; but mere feeling is a poor excuse for proceedings against American fishermen which may at any moment embroil the two countries in hostilities. Situated as they are, the Canadians should remember that discretion is sometimes the better part of valor.

The business men of Chicago protest in "mass meeting" against the continuance of the present taxation. They demand revision and reduction both of the tariff and under the internal revenue laws. We hope that the example thus set will be followed by the trading and industrial classes of other cities. The time has come when the people should be heard. The Senate is against them in the matter of taxation. The House is more alive to expressions of public opinion, and it should be stimulated to the proper use of its opportunities. Relief will not be obtained without an effort—earnest and prolonged. Let the people speak!

It appears from the Board of Health reports that in the recent visitations of small-pox a very large proportion of adults fell victims. They had nearly all been vaccinated in infancy. It will be some consolation to those who have submitted to the inconvenience of revaccination to know that the precaution is absolutely necessary as a safeguard against the disease. Medical science seems to have established the fact that the effects of vaccination as a prophylactic do not last more than eight or ten years.

The relatives and friends of Capt. WILLIAMS may, perhaps, derive some small comfort from the thought that the story of his heroism in the face of death will be remembered as long as the world retains its admiration for gallant deeds. "He would not leave his post on the bridge, although he was almost pulled away, and when urged by Mr. YATES replied, 'Line drawn with my life.' A gaily officer wanted him to go, he grasped the line and said, 'No, this is my place, and here I remain.' These are the stories which people tell each other, with softened hearts, over the Winter's fire, and which incite the young to courageous acts and self-denying aims. There is no book of chivalry, no volume of "Stories of the Sea," in which the loss of the brave officers of the Oneida will not be treasured up, to draw tears from thousands long after this generation has passed away.

In Kentucky, recently, a criminal had to be tried, and the Circuit Judge refused to allow him to be lodged in the jail. Before the next morning he was taken away and hanged by an unknown band. Within twenty miles of Lexington another band hung a man to a tree, and pinned a paper on his breast warning every body not to take him down until a certain hour named. The Coroner and his attendants were called to the spot, and waited, watch in hand, until the hour fixed by the assassins had arrived. Both these outrages were committed by the Kuklux Klan. Is there no hope for Kentucky?

The demand of the English public for the works of some American authors is remarkably great. Beginning in this century with IRVING, quite an imposing array in the departments of fiction, essay, history and poetry represent our national genius and scholarship on the lists of works most largely taken of English book-sellers and circulating libraries. It is not surprising, although it is very pleasant to hear, that HAWTHORNE and EMERSON, and MOTLEY and LONGFELLOW are in such brisk demand among our cousins. The books of these writers command the attention of any public that speaks their tongue. Nor are we astonished at the rush for an Uncle Tom's Cabin—a production whose political and humanitarian attractions throw into shade its literary ones. But a wide spread craving for transatlantic theological literature is more strange; since on such subjects heterodoxy is thought by many religious English people to flourish unrestrained in the United States; the irreligious seldom care for such works, and the home supply of them has been so large. We find, however, that the writings of several of our principal workers in that field are almost as eagerly sought in England as our best poetry and romance. From the treatises of the strictest denominationalists to the progressive essays of MR. ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS, the London publishers successfully offer a wide range of American contributions to this department of thought. Just now we observe that a new edition of CHANNING'S works is announced in London, which is to be comprised in a single volume of 800 pages, at the price of three shillings and sixpence sterling. It is to be published in May, and at the last accounts 12,000 copies had been ordered.

Now that we have welcomed the Smidt, as something that was lost and is found, and rejoiced over the safety of all on board, it may not be amiss to ask, if, after all, such a slow kind of ship is the fittest to be employed in the Winter months to bring over emigrants. The European emigration to this country seems, from last year's report, to be increasing, and shippers of human cargoes will be anxious to make the most of such a trade. They should take warning by the case of the Smidt, with her break in the machinery and her slowness under sail, and put none but sound, strong ships, with perfect machinery, on that Atlantic track in Winter.

The peace at any price people have a new ally in M. LEROY-BEAULIEU, who has set himself to prove at Paris that all the wars between 1815 and 1856 might have been avoided if those concerned had cared to avoid them. We apprehend that his attempt is more rhetorical than scientific; and that, like a good deal of the French writing of the day, it is brilliant rather than novel. His summary of the expenditure in men and money, between the years named, is as follows:

War.	Men killed.	Millards of francs expended.
Crimean	794,891	5,600
Italian	40,000	1,800
Danish	3,500	100
American (North)	221,000	22,500
American (South)	518,000	11,800
Austro-Prussian	20,000	1,600
Various	20,000	1,000
Total	1,748,421	44,400

There is some doubt about the correctness of all of these figures, but there can be none that the losses in the thirteen years were gigantic and pitiable. Yet, regarding the matter in its purely economic aspects, who shall say that the United States will be less rich or less populous in the year 1900 than they would have been had we avoided the late civil war? M. LEROY-BEAULIEU does not enter upon speculations like these, or, indeed, upon any that do not seem familiar; and what he says reminds us forcibly of HALLAM'S criticism on the moral essays of TASSO, which, said the historian, assert what the reader has never seen denied, and distinguish what he is in no danger of confounding.

The BOURBONS are in all things an unlucky race, and their present condition is like that of the unfortunate Jews who, when TITUS was battering down Jerusalem about their ears, were fighting more furiously among themselves than against the enemy. We have HENRI DE BOURBON falling by the hand of his French cousin; and though Queen ISABELLA and Don FRANCISCO D'ASSIS don't meet with pistols, they do the next worst thing, and meet, with umpires, to settle their life-long cat and dog differences. As for the other chip of that very old block—HENRY V., or the Count of CHAMBORD—it is very probable he holds the rest of those BOURBONS in great contempt, and would be ready at a convenient opportunity to throw cold water on their pretensions. From all which it seems evident that the people of progress in the several European countries have not much to fear from that not very "happy family" of the BOURBONS or BOBBONS.

Mr. BERNAL OSBORNE had a hot fight to pass through before arriving at the Paradise of the House of Commons. During the election proceedings at Waterford, Sir HENRY BARRON called him a "second edition of Jeremy Diddler." Mr. OSBORNE in replying said, "I dismiss the Baronet as a scold, only fit to take his place by that old woman up there," pointing to a solitary female in the gallery who had for some time been putting out her tongue at the speaker. Mr. OSBORNE continued, "When he dares to address me, I hurl back his slander with contempt in his teeth—if he has any." This last qualification is as cautious as the Scotchman's answer to his friend: "Where's Sandy?" "That I canna say—but he died last week."

The Buffalo folk are easily satisfied in regard to canal matters, if we are to credit the reports. We are told that an enthusiastic meeting was held on Chicago in that city, on Friday, to express the general sentiment on the passage of Senator HAGERMAN'S bill repealing the contract system of canal repairs. The action of the Legislature was fully indorsed, and resolutions were passed approving the action of the Erie County delegation, and congratulating the people side of the State on the reform which had been inaugurated. We trust that the rejoicings of the Buffalo people may not turn out to be premature, and that they will not discover hereafter that the bill from which they anticipate so much is a potentiaj device intended to "turn the sword of promise to our ear, and break it to our hope." To our mind the bill is far from being what it should be, and we have already specified our objections. We notice that the Buffalo Commercial is of the same way of thinking. It says:

"On the whole, the bill is a step in the right direction. We accept it for the same reason that we recommended its passage, namely, because under the circumstances it is the best we can get. But it falls far short of what the Republican members of the Legislature promised and labored for."

We think that the Buffalo Board of Trade jubilation must either have been had upon the above basis, or that it was of purely Democratic inspiration.

OBITUARY.

The Comte de Montalembert.

A cable dispatch from Paris brings us the intelligence that the ultramontane journals of that city were in mourning yesterday for the death of the Comte DE MONTALEMBERT, for many years distinguished in the religious and political controversies of France, and one of the most powerful writers in the ultramontane ranks.

CHARLES FORBES DE TEYON, Comte de Montalembert, was born in London on the 16th of March, 1810. His father, MARC RENE MARIE DE MONTALEMBERT, served in the army of CONDE, and subsequently in the British army, with great credit, having acted during the Spanish campaign on the staff of the Duke of WELLINGTON. The son was educated in the best schools in Paris, and before he was twenty years of age had written a small work on Sweden, which introduced him to the literary circles of that metropolis, and led to an acquaintance with GUIZOT. From this time he began to gain notoriety for his liberal views on religion and politics, and in 1830 was associated with LACORDAIRE in the establishment of the democratic and ultramontane journal L'Avenir.

The doctrines of this publication came under the censorship of the Roman See, and during the examination MONTALEMBERT and his fellow editors went to Rome to plead their own cause. They met with very little success, and in the course of another year L'Avenir was given up. Its founders did not, however, abandon their liberal ideas, but in conjunction with DE COUX, established a free Catholic school, in which they continued to disseminate the opinions which they had adopted. This was soon closed by the Police, and its directors arraigned before one of the interior tribunals of Paris for violation of the ordinances on public instruction. In the meantime MONTALEMBERT'S father, who had been raised to the Peerage in 1819, died, and he succeeded to his title in June, 1831. He then availed himself of the privileges of his rank, and had the case transferred to the Court of Peers, where he conducted his own defense. Notwithstanding a brilliant speech which he delivered on that occasion the youthful Comte was condemned to pay a fine of 100 francs. For several years thereafter he devoted himself to a study of the history of the Middle Ages, and in 1836 published a legendary Life of St. Elizabeth of Hungary, Duchess of Thuringia, with a historical introduction. An essay, Du Vandalisme et du Catholicisme dans les Arts appeared in 1840, and from that time forward MONTALEMBERT became well known as a powerful writer on the religious and political questions of the time. In 1840 his age entitled him to the rights and privileges of a member of the Chamber of Peers, and he frequently took part in the debates of that body, generally espousing the cause of the Church when any controversy arose in which its interests were involved. When the debates occurred in 1843 concerning the relations of Church and State, he issued his Manifest Catholique, and became the recognized leader of the Catholic Party. On the breaking out of the revolution in 1848 he issued an address, in which he avowed himself in favor of a Republic, and was elected a Deputy in the Constituent Assembly for the Department of Doubs. He did not, however, act with the extreme Democrats, but preserved a moderate course, growing more and more conservative as events progressed. He opposed the admission of LOUIS NAPOLEON, and voted against the new constitution, at the same time supporting the bill for the restriction of the Press. Being returned to the Legislative Assembly a second time by the departments of Doubs and Côtes du Nord, he engaged in some brilliant forensic contests with VICTOR HUGO, and in June, 1851, had a famous debate with that great orator and author on the revision of the Constitution. He continued his hostility against LOUIS NAPOLEON, and after the coup d'état protested against the imprisonment of the Deputies. He remained in the Legislative Body until 1857, since which time he has lived mostly in retirement, engaged on important literary works. He contributed frequently to the columns of the Correspondent, and for an article published in that journal on the 25th of October, 1858, entitled "A Debate on India in the English Parliament," in which he drew some invidious comparisons between England and France, he was prosecuted and sentenced to six months' imprisonment and a fine of three thousand francs, which penalties, however, were remitted by the Emperor. Besides important contributions to the Revue du Deux Mondes and the Encyclopedie Catholique, MONTALEMBERT has published several books since the efforts of his early manhood. Chief among these are, Des Interets Catholiques aux XIX. Siecle, (1852;) L'Avenir Politique de l'Autriche, (1856;) Pie IX. et Lord Palmerston, (1856;) Les Moines de l'Occident, depuis Saint Benoit Jusqua Saint Bernard, (1860;) La Pape Lacordaire, (1862;) L'Eglise Libre dans l'Etat Libre, (1863;) and Le Pape et le Pologne, (1864.) Several of these works have been translated into English. As a leader of the Liberal Roman Catholic Party in France, the Comte DE MONTALEMBERT occupied a large share of attention for many years, but had latterly passed somewhat from public notice.

THE SITUATION IN TEXAS.

Letter from Gov. Davis to the President—Early Reconstruction of the State Desired.

From the Washington Star, March 12.

We have been furnished with a copy of the following important letter from Gov. DAVIS to the President, in regard to the state of affairs in Texas:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, AUSTIN, TEXAS, Feb. 24, 1870.

SIR: The Legislature of this State at its recent session adopted the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments with great unanimity, and the other respects shown a disposition, in good faith and with great alacrity, to follow the requirements of Congress in the matter of reconstruction. It has elected Senators of excellent personal character and political sentiment fully in accordance with the majority in Congress.

Under the circumstances, I think the process of reconstruction may safely be expedited by the prompt admission of the State. But, while this should be done without delay, I do not think it advisable to immediately withdraw the United States troops from the State. I have to request that this be done gradually and by concert with the State authorities as soon as the new organization is prepared to maintain public order, which, I trust, will not be long hence. In connection with this matter, I believe our Senators and Representatives in Congress will coincide with me in requesting that Gen. J. J. REYNOLDS be left in command here. As you will perceive from the resolutions of the Legislature (transmitted in another inclosure) in relation to that officer, the members of that body have a high appreciation of his services and integrity, and in this opinion I fully agree.

While it is advisable to retain United States troops in the interior for the present, the frontier calls for considerable addition to the military force for the protection of the settlers, or else the adoption of some new policy that will put an end to the harassing warfare that has disturbed the borders of Texas since annexation. I believe it has been suggested by the military authorities of the United States that the territory of Texas known as the "Pan-Handle" be added to the Indian Territory as a reservation for those savages which infest Texas. Some such measure or a war of extermination seems necessary to secure permanent peace here, and relieve the Government of the great expense attending the maintenance of large bodies of troops on our frontier.

With the re-establishment and maintenance of law and order, promptly and permanently, as we hope, the suppression of Indian depredations and the encouragement of a system of internal improvements that will directly connect our State with the rest of the Union, we have reason to anticipate that our State, with its cheap and fertile lands, will offer a tempting field to immigrants from the older States and from Europe. We invite them to a free occupancy of our vacant territory, and propose to make them secure in life and property.

Asking your kind co-operation in securing the early reconstruction of our State, and your valuable assistance in carrying out the purposes above indicated, I remain, respectfully, your obedient servant, EDMUND J. DAVIS,

Governor elect.

His Excellency, U. S. GRANT, President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

CUBAN AFFAIRS.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP CLEOPATRA.

The steamship Cleopatra, from Havana March 6, reached this port yesterday. For the prompt delivery of our correspondence, printed below, we are indebted to the courtesy of Purser BURRILL.

The Carnival in Havana—The Execution of Zamora—Proclamation of Re Roda—Jourdan's Position—Arrest of Masons.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HAVANA, Tuesday, March 8, 1870.

The so-called Octava of the Carnival took place on Sunday afternoon, the Paseo being crowded with coaches, a double line of vehicles extending from the Castillo del Principe to the Punta, a distance of over three miles. It is estimated that over three thousand vehicles and about seventy thousand persons turned out to witness or participate in the spectacle. Masks on foot were permitted to promenade the streets, and notwithstanding this privilege, so tenaciously denied in former years, and the immense gathering of people, much larger than was ever seen before, not a single breach of the peace took place. Among the masked bands a cart drawn by four mules engaged general attention. A group of four maskers occupied the vehicle, they representing MIGUEL ALDAMA, JOSE MORALES LEMUS, A. F. BRAMOSIO, members of the Cuban Junta, and Mrs. EMILIA C. VILLAVERDE. The likenesses were excellent, the masks having been drawn and modeled from photographs by the celebrated LANDALUZE. A lot of turkeys hung up by the heels and a couple of miserable monkeys on a board completed the spectacle. The originator and executor of this show was not a Spaniard, as would be naturally supposed, but MR. JOSE OLANO, a Cuban, and a native of this city.

EXECUTION OF ZAMORA.

Although reports have been current that some volunteers would attempt to rescue ZAMORA and prevent his execution, all passed off as quietly as could be desired. ZAMORA marched with a firm step to the place of execution. The bullets were unerring and killed him instantly. Detachments from all the volunteer battalions were present, and not a voice was heard either threateningly or imploringly. The volunteers' behavior was admirable and belied all reports previously circulated. Yet many remarks were made by Spaniards, asking each other or some American friend, "Will the people of the United States do the same with those who killed CASTANON, at Key West, and will they mete out justice to the guilty as has been done here?" The two cases are different, but the people have a right to demand the punishment of those who killed CASTANON, provided the law finds them guilty.

A PROCLAMATION.

After the execution, the following proclamation by RODAS appeared in the official gazette, directed to the volunteers:

Some days ago, a horrible occurrence and attack on the security of individuals took place in this city, resulting in the death of a foreigner, and in the dangerous wounding of two others. These foreigners, with another, who, by good fortune, escaped unharmed, were walking peaceably in one of the most public and frequented places of this city, when they were attacked by a man armed with a revolver and dirk, without cause. He, in company with others, inflicted deadly wounds upon them. These foreigners were under the protection of the Spanish flag and under the guarantee of the laws of nations and of humanity. The assassin outraged the laws and stained our flag. For these reasons he has suffered the extreme penalty of the law as a just punishment.

The unfortunate ZAMORA, who committed and expatiated his crime, was a volunteer, and although every man has his individual honor to defend there is also a collective one, and the collective honor of the institution was affected by the crime; it has again begun to shine without a stain since the expiation.

Volunteers: Since the crime was committed you had formed your judgment, and reproving the crime, have waited by the side of the authorities, as always, the decision of the law; the laws have been executed. Let the island, Spain and the whole world know that you are the stanchest aids of order and justice, as it is known to you Captain-General,

CABALLERO DE RODAS.

JOURDAN'S POSITION.

The ideas which some Americans have of the war in Cuba and the whereabouts of Cubans and Spaniards, cannot be better illustrated than by copying the following letter, which came in the regular mail, United States postage-stamps affixed, and post marked Nashville, Feb. 19, directed to no less a personage than Gen. JOURDAN, Commander-in-Chief Cuban Army, Island of Cuba. It is dated Nashville, Tenn., Feb. 18, 1870, and reads:

SIR: Greatly sympathizing with you in your efforts to free Cuba from the yoke of tyranny, I desire to be with you, and if you will send me a commission as Surgeon I will soon be ministering to the wants of your sick and wounded soldiers. I served four years in the United States army as Surgeon, and can refer you to Hons. J. A. GARFIELD, member of Congress; J. B. DOWLEY, member of Congress; and W. F. PROSSER, member of Congress, at Washington, D. C., and W. A. HAMMOND, late Surgeon-General United States Army.

How could I be paid for medical supplies if furnished by me from here, and could I get them through?

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Pension Surgeon.

——may be a very wise and humane man, but the idea of sending a letter to JOURDAN by mail is simply ridiculous. Our speculating doctor undoubtedly imagined that JOURDAN held the island under his thumb, and that RODAS was roosting somewhere in the bush, instead of opening and reading the doctor's letter in the palace at Havana.

ARREST OF MASONS.

On Saturday evening the Police made a descent on the building No. 87 Obrapia-street, where Masonic Lodge No. 1 held its sessions. The brethren were then holding a so-called lodge of mourning, and the meeting was denounced to the Captain-General. Fifty-one persons arrested were taken to jail, where they still lie, five others, foreigners, being allowed to go about their business. This action will undoubtedly be largely commented upon, and therefore a few facts in relation to it may not be amiss. The assembling of bodies, without consent of the authorities, is strictly prohibited. Gen. RODAS refused to allow any Masonic meetings to be held for several reasons. The institution is held of bad repute by the Spaniards, although some of the most prominent Spaniards belong to the Order. Masonry has been used as a cloak to cover and inaugurate the present revolution. Clandestinely made Masons and clandestine lodges have existed here and been used for political purposes. All the prominent men of the revolution are Masons, many of them having joined the Order shortly before the breaking out of the war, &c., &c. There are many good and true Masons here, both Spaniards and Cubans, men who are truly Masonic in spirit and ideas, but others undoubtedly joined the Order for political purposes. The members acted against the laws of the country in assembling, and in that respect the action of the authorities was justifiable. RODAS was compelled to act as he did, the meeting having been denounced by the volunteers, who consider all Masons as nothing less than insurgents. It is expected that the members arrested will be released, however, shortly.

QUASIMODO.

The Morning Star Sunday-School.

Notwithstanding the unpropitious weather a goodly number of people assembled yesterday to listen to the public exercises which are provided on the second Sunday of every month by the Morning Star Sunday-school in Apollo Hall, corner Twenty-eighth-street and Broadway. The temperance apostle, Rev. STEPHEN MERRITT, gave some personal reminiscences, and related his sensations while being pulled out of the North River with a rope last Thursday. A very instructive black-board exercise, followed by a lecture on Eastern customs, calculated to throw much light on Bible history, was given by Mr. C. A. VAN LENNEP, of this City. At the close of the exercises the Superintendent, Dr. PERRY, announced that the school would hold a fair on the 7th, 8th and 9th of April, for the purpose of raising a mission chapel fund, and solicited contributions of money or articles for the tables, to be sent on or before the day of opening.

Operations of a Ticket-Swindler.

Mr. ISAAC R. KEEP, a Canadian, arrived in this City on Friday, and was accosted by a swindling runner at the New-Haven Railroad depot, and induced to go to the ticket office, No. 9 Hoboken-street. There KEEP purchased what he believed to be a ticket for California, and by means of the "bilt game" was swindled out of $111 in gold coin. The swindler made an unsuccessful effort to place a belt supposed to contain a portion of gold coin, secreted in the victim's vest, and he was hurried over to Jersey City. Before leaving the ferry house for the cars, KEEP examined his belt, and found that it only contained $7 50 in silver coin. He then applied to Capt. FERRY for assistance, when that officer directed Detective FIELD to work up the case. The detective succeeded in recovering the money, and sent the Canadian on his journey rejoicing yesterday, the ticket fortunately proving a good one. No arrests were made, as it seems impossible to get even a trial in such cases.

AMUSEMENTS.

Opera and the Theaters.

The promised season of English opera at the Academy of Music will be commenced this evening. At Bilio's "Ballo in Maschera" will have one of its two final performances. "The Emerald Ring" being acted here on Wednesday. The San Francisco Minstrels announce the first rehearsal of a new burlesque, of which the Wall-street representatives of the fair sex, somewhat darkened as to color and broadened as to general physique, are to be the leading interpreters.

At other houses no material change in last week's programmes are to be looked for.

Count BISMARCK has given the University of Virginia a valuable collection of photographs and engraved designs of recent Government works in Germany, exhibiting the modern improvements applied to bridges, canals, railways and public buildings.

The Virginia Historical Society held its first meeting since the war, in Richmond, on Thursday last. Appropriate action was taken in memory of the former President, Wm. C. RIVES, Esq., and HUGH BLAIR GRIGSBY, LL.D., its new President, was inaugurated and delivered an address.

The publishers of the Raleigh (N. C.) Standard having been changed, Mr. H. L. PIKE has retired from its editorial management. The Standard has, during the past year, been ably conducted by him, and ever ready to promote the interests of the State. The Standard announces that it will continue to support in good faith the Republican Party.

An Auburn gentleman who wished to sell his house advertised in the Advertiser, but received no applicants. His neighbor, who also wished to sell his house, did not advertise, but received numerous offers. Here was a mystery, but examination showed that the party advertising had mistaken the number of his house, and was offering that of his neighbor. A change in the figures was at once made.

The Mayor of Philadelphia has investigated the reports that a family of Polish Prussian immigrants, which recently arrived in that city on their way to the West, had been grievously imposed upon, their baggage seized and their daughters abducted, and he publishes affidavits to show that the charges were false and intended to injure the good name and fame of the City of Brotherly Love.

The Boston Commonwealth says: "JOHN BRIGHT intended to visit our country soon after the surrender of Gen. LEE, and had resolved to come. Wise friends persuaded him to defer his visit. He acceded to their request, as they were Americans, and his personal friends. But if he lives long enough to shape the Government of England, and retain a moderate share of health, JOHN BRIGHT is certain to tread the sanctified soil of our redeemed Republic."

Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY having been requested to reconsider his determination not again to be a candidate for Congress, has consented to do so, provided that the Republicans of his district elect a nominating convention which shall approve a proper Civil Service bill, and instruct the candidate nominated to make its principles his rule of action if elected; or shall adopt a Resolution deprecating the interference of representatives in the selection of subordinate employes in the public offices and workshops.

A writer in the Salem Gazette says a pine tree, twenty feet in height and ten inches in diameter at the base, has grown upon the solid rock in Beverly, Mass., and, as it grew, unable to obtain moisture and support from the rock or to penetrate its surface, sent out its roots for supplies. These traveled twenty or more feet over a rocky ledge until they reached a swamp, and from thence the tree has been built up. The roots, where they run over the ledge, are three or four inches in circumference and of the same color as the rock, so that they can scarcely be distinguished from it.

A Pawtucket man while riding in a crowded horse car, put his elbow through the window. He told the conductor that he would pay for the glass, but had not the money with him. The conductor said "all right," and allowed him to go without even leaving his name. After reaching home, he sent the President of the Company $1 50 to pay for a new pane of glass. The uprightness and rareness of the act pleased the latter so much that he sent him some $2 50 worth of tickets in return. The honesty of the Pawtucket man is not so wonderful, but the liberality of the President is what perplexes us.

The Galena (Ill.) Gazette narrates how three young men, who ascertained that a certain young lady had engaged herself to each of them, fiercely quarreled about it for several months, and then agreed to wait upon the girl in a body and ask her to take her choice. But the girl quietly informed them that it was a quarrel of their own, in which she was not particularly interested, and that they must settle it among themselves. Whereupon they retired and settled the difficulty by drawing lots, and the winner married the girl last week. The bride declares that she got the one that was her choice from the first.

The Boston Traveller reports that a man, apparently in the last stages of consumption, came to the house of a physician not many miles from Boston, and said that he had been given up by several physicians, but had been advised to call upon him. The physician was ill, and dictated a prescription to be compounded by his son. Subsequently it appeared that too much of one ingredient had been put in by mistake, and the physician was fearful that the dose would prove fatal. All efforts to find the sick man, however, were unsuccessful, and the papers were eagerly watched with the expectation of seeing his death chronicled. Some time afterward the bell was rung, the patient again appeared, and was profuse in thanks, declaring that he owed his life to the physician, and no sacrifice he could possibly make for him would be too great. He was not asked to sacrifice anything.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Congress and the Currency—A Creditor's View of the Case.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The recent decision of the Supreme Court in reference to the constitutionality of the legal tender clause as applied to pre-existing debts, having been the subject of much severe comment by numerous journals, I desire to make a few remarks on the other side of the question.

It seems to be the opinion of very many people that a great wrong has thereby been done to the debtor interest, whereas the effect simply is to require debtors to pay what they have promised to pay—nothing more. Is there any thing unjust in that? I should say not. It certainly does not speak well for the intelligence, not to say honesty of men, that such an outcry should have been made against a decision which requires only the performance of contracts. If it is demanded something not contemplated when the contracts were made; if debtors, for instance, were required to pay more than they expected, or could reasonably have anticipated, the case would be entirely different, and good ground for complaint would have been afforded. It is not debtors, therefore, but creditors, and they alone, who have any right to complain. The former have had a very mee time of it for eight years; while the latter, under a mistaken notion of fair dealing, and in most instances, doubtless, without the most distant idea that they were doing any wrong, have been paying less than a fair construction of their obligations demanded.

But now, when the tables are turned; when, for the first time, the rights and duties of both parties are explained by the highest authority in the land; when the law, as now interpreted, says, pay certain debts in coin, because coin was promised; all those in the debtor interest are offended, as though they have been the subject of some judicial outrage!

Perhaps it may be thought a work of supererogation to add anything to the cogent reasoning of Judge CHASE. There are few persons, I think, uninformed by their interest who can read the decision of the majority of the Court without assenting to its conclusions. As much cannot be said for the argument of the minority, excepting that part of it which supports the legal tender clause as a constitutional act; but when Justice MILLER attempts to justify the application of it to pre-existing debts, his reasoning is singularly weak and inconclusive. He displays an astonishing inability to see the difference between cases as wide asunder as the poles—a difference that must be quite apparent even to those who have had no advantage of legal training.

It seems to be a very prevalent opinion that, because Congress is expressly prohibited from passing any act impairing the obligation of contracts, therefore such power must necessarily be possessed by the National Legislature. This being a Government of delegated powers, the question may be asked, how Congress came in possession of such a power. It has never been given by the people, and if ever exercised, it would be through an assumption justifiable only by that state of things which makes the safety of the people the supreme law. Not being delegated to Congress, it was, of course, reserved to the States—if even States were empowered so far to interfere with private rights—but to effectually prevent the perpetration of so great a wrong, an article to that end was inserted in the Constitution. Now, what it would be morally wrong for a State to do, the United States cannot do without a great outrage upon one of the declared objects of the Constitution, as stated in the preamble—viz.: "to establish justice." The establishment of justice required that contracts should be held sacred, and beyond the interference of the States. The same object demands that Congress, too, should have no power to invalidate solemn and lawful engagements among the people.

It will be answered, of course, that this power is among the implied, or auxiliary powers, as Mr. CHASE calls them. If that be the case, then, as the Chief-Justice well remarks, the implied powers, so liable to abuse, would entirely change the character of the Government. It would not be one of delegated powers, and all the labors of the framers to make it so would have been in vain. Congress, in a word, would be all but omnipotent. The very idea of limitation would be a delusion, since ingenious men could always find a pretext and plausible reasons for assuming up implied powers, in the absence of others, to justify almost any outrage upon the people's rights. We have proof of this already in the attempted application of the legal tender clause to pre-existing debts, by which one, and that a large portion of our citizens, have been literally robbed of a considerable part of their property. Had paper money become absolutely worthless, creditors would have had no redress, if Congress can legally go so far under implied powers.

The serious question then arises, whether we actually stand in such imminent danger from this vast and fearful magazine of undefined, implied powers. Is it possible that they are yet to prove a source of oppression, if not ruin, to us? or is there not something somewhere in the Constitution, or in the inalienable rights of the people, to operate as a check upon the exercise of powers which are claimed to be almost without limit? I think there is.

Since, then, by the language of the Constitution, every auxiliary power, however extravagant and unnecessary, may be construed to justify any law to the serious injury of large classes of citizens, we are forced to the conclusion that the words conferring powers so fraught with danger, should be limited and controlled by the preamble, which states the grand objects intended to be secured by the Constitution. It were preposterous to set forth the establishment of justice, and the promotion of the general welfare as two of its purposes, and then, after prohibiting the States from the perpetration of particular kinds of injustice, confer upon Congress through the means of auxiliary powers, the right of perpetrating the same wrongs. Should it be said that much must necessarily be trusted to the discretion, integrity, and patriotism of the people's representatives, I ask, in reply, why so much care was taken to limit their powers? No; the people's rights and liberties were too dear to those who framed, and those who accepted the fundamental law, to warrant the conclusion that a whit more was intrusted to their discretion than the sternest necessity required. While, therefore, powers liable to abuse were, in words, conferred, it must certainly have been intended that Congress should be held in check by the expressed and necessary enforcement of the declared objects of the Constitution, and by those moral considerations set forth in the prohibitions to the States against invalidating contracts, against the deprivation of property without due course of law, and the passage of laws having a retrocactive operation. If this be not so, then our property, our liberties, and our very lives are placed at the disposal of Congress.

Another argument against applying the legal tender clause to pre-existing debts, is the rule that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law. The minority of the Court answer that this is frequently done in effect by acts unquestionably constitutional. A change in the Tariff laws, for example, has frequently diminished the value of manufacturing property; but that is no reason, they say, why such laws should not be passed. Granted; but who does not see that the effect of such laws is incidental merely? The difference between such an act and one, the direct effect of which is to take from the creditor a portion of his property, and give it to his debtor, is so real and palpable, that it is quite amazing that it should be overlooked. It would, it seems to me, be difficult to imagine a more striking instance of illegal deprivation of property, than that of unsettling the relations of debtor and creditor, by which one loses and the other gains. In one case a constitutional law is passed, the incidental effect of which may be to injure somebody; in the other, the debtor is directly empowered to offer as sufficient payment a kind of money much less in value than that which had been promised. Yet the minority of the Court profess to see no difference between these cases!

I do not deny that, in the last resort, the exercise of almost any powers might be justifiably used. Salus populi suprema lex. But in such a dire extremity, the Constitution would be suspended, just as the law against the taking of life is suspended in favor of him who is attacked with deadly weapons and driven to the wall. Such a state of things, however, had not come to pass when the legal tender law was enacted, nor ever afterward. No necessity, therefore, ever existed for making that law applicable to pre-existing debts. Mr. SHERMAN, in a recent speech, maintains that it was necessary; but he expresses an opinion only. The experiment had not been tried, and he is, therefore, far from knowing the fact. The opinions of certain merchants of New-York, in support of the supposed necessity, are worth no more than his. Mr. CHASE is confronted with his own letter in support of the legal tender clause; but it is to be observed that he says nothing about applying it to debts already in existence, and so his letter argues nothing in favor of such application, nor any thing in his conscience.

Mr. SHERMAN adds that "the legal tender clause was useful only as a means of compelling creditors to the extent of the depreciation to suffer the loss." Here is justice for you! In other words, Congress, according to Mr. SHERMAN, intended to compel creditors to support the war so to speak, unknowingly. Yet the debtors were at the same time, and by the same measure, to be actually enriched by the common calamity. God help us if future wars are to be carried on upon financial principles so atrocious.

If Congress had felt any regard for justice and private rights, the least it could have done was to try whether a bill with existing debts excepted from its provisions would not have answered every purpose. Had it failed, (and a very short time would have determined the question,) the necessity of including all debts would then have been satisfactorily proved. With the haste and recklessness, however, which characterize too much of the legislation of this country, the necessity and propriety of the [illegible] all in possession [illegible] and [illegible] granted, and was profuse in thanks, declaring that he owed his life to the physician, and no sacrifice he could possibly make for him would be too great. He was not asked to sacrifice anything.

Congress and the Currency—A Creditor's View of the Case.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The recent decision of the Supreme Court in reference to the constitutionality of the legal tender clause as applied to pre-existing debts, having been the subject of much severe comment by numerous journals, I desire to make a few remarks on the other side of the question.

It seems to be the opinion of very many people that a great wrong has thereby been done to the debtor interest, whereas the effect simply is to require debtors to pay what they have promised to pay—nothing more. Is there any thing unjust in that? I should say not. It certainly does not speak well for the intelligence, not to say honesty of men, that such an outcry should have been made against a decision which requires only the performance of contracts. If it demanded something not contemplated when the contracts were made; if debtors, for instance, were required to pay more than they expected, or could reasonably have anticipated, the case would be entirely different, and good ground for complaint would have been afforded. It is not debtors, therefore, but creditors, and they alone, who have any right to complain. The former have had a very mee time of it for eight years; while the latter, under a mistaken notion of fair dealing, and in most instances, doubtless, without the most distant idea that they were doing any wrong, have been paying less than a fair construction of their obligations demanded.

But now, when the tables are turned; when, for the first time, the rights and duties of both parties are explained by the highest authority in the land; when the law, as now interpreted, says, pay certain debts in coin, because coin was promised; all those in the debtor interest are offended, as though they have been the subject of some judicial outrage!

Perhaps it may be thought a work of supererogation to add anything to the cogent reasoning of Judge CHASE. There are few persons, I think, uninformed by their interest who can read the decision of the majority of the Court without assenting to its conclusions. As much cannot be said for the argument of the minority, excepting that part of it which supports the legal tender clause as a constitutional act; but when Justice MILLER attempts to justify the application of it to pre-existing debts, his reasoning is singularly weak and inconclusive. He displays an astonishing inability to see the difference between cases as wide asunder as the poles—a difference that must be quite apparent even to those who have had no advantage of legal training.

It seems to be a very prevalent opinion that, because Congress is expressly prohibited from passing any act impairing the obligation of contracts, therefore such power must necessarily be possessed by the National Legislature. This being a Government of delegated powers, the question may be asked, how Congress came in possession of such a power. It has never been given by the people, and if ever exercised, it would be through an assumption justifiable only by that state of things which makes the safety of the people the supreme law. Not being delegated to Congress, it was, of course, reserved to the States—if even States were empowered so far to interfere with private rights—but to effectually prevent the perpetration of so great a wrong, an article to that end was inserted in the Constitution. Now, what it would be morally wrong for a State to do, the United States cannot do without a great outrage upon one of the declared objects of the Constitution, as stated in the preamble—viz.: "to establish justice." The establishment of justice required that contracts should be held sacred, and beyond the interference of the States. The same object demands that Congress, too, should have no power to invalidate solemn and lawful engagements among the people.

It will be answered, of course, that this power is among the implied, or auxiliary powers, as Mr. CHASE calls them. If that be the case, then, as the Chief-Justice well remarks, the implied powers, so liable to abuse, would entirely change the character of the Government. It would not be one of delegated powers, and all the labors of the framers to make it so would have been in vain. Congress, in a word, would be all but omnipotent. The very idea of limitation would be a delusion, since ingenious men could always find a pretext and plausible reasons for assuming up implied powers, in the absence of others, to justify almost any outrage upon the people's rights. We have proof of this already in the attempted application of the legal tender clause to pre-existing debts, by which one, and that a large portion of our citizens, have been literally robbed of a considerable part of their property. Had paper money become absolutely worthless, creditors would have had no redress, if Congress can legally go so far under implied powers.

The serious question then arises, whether we actually stand in such imminent danger from this vast and fearful magazine of undefined, implied powers. Is it possible that they are yet to prove a source of oppression, if not ruin, to us? or is there not something somewhere in the Constitution, or in the inalienable rights of the people, to operate as a check upon the exercise of powers which are claimed to be almost without limit? I think there is.

Since, then, by the language of the Constitution, every auxiliary power, however extravagant and unnecessary, may be construed to justify any law to the serious injury of large classes of citizens, we are forced to the conclusion that the words conferring powers so fraught with danger, should be limited and controlled by the preamble, which states the grand objects intended to be secured by the Constitution. It were preposterous to set forth the establishment of justice, and the promotion of the general welfare as two of its purposes, and then, after prohibiting the States from the perpetration of particular kinds of injustice, confer upon Congress through the means of auxiliary powers, the right of perpetrating the same wrongs. Should it be said that much must necessarily be trusted to the discretion, integrity, and patriotism of the people's representatives, I ask, in reply, why so much care was taken to limit their powers? No; the people's rights and liberties were too dear to those who framed, and those who accepted the fundamental law, to warrant the conclusion that a whit more was intrusted to their discretion than the sternest necessity required. While, therefore, powers liable to abuse were, in words, conferred, it must certainly have been intended that Congress should be held in check by the expressed and necessary enforcement of the declared objects of the Constitution, and by those moral considerations set forth in the prohibitions to the States against invalidating contracts, against the deprivation of property without due course of law, and the passage of laws having a retrocactive operation. If this be not so, then our property, our liberties, and our very lives are placed at the disposal of Congress.

Another argument against applying the legal tender clause to pre-existing debts, is the rule that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law. The minority of the Court answer that this is frequently done in effect by acts unquestionably constitutional. A change in the Tariff laws, for example, has frequently diminished the value of manufacturing property; but that is no reason, they say, why such laws should not be passed. Granted; but who does not see that the effect of such laws is incidental merely? The difference between such an act and one, the direct effect of which is to take from the creditor a portion of his property, and give it to his debtor, is so real and palpable, that it is quite amazing that it should be overlooked. It would, it seems to me, be difficult to imagine a more striking instance of illegal deprivation of property, than that of unsettling the relations of debtor and creditor, by which one loses and the other gains. In one case a constitutional law is passed, the incidental effect of which may be to injure somebody; in the other, the debtor is directly empowered to offer as sufficient payment a kind of money much less in value than that which had been promised. Yet the minority of the Court profess to see no difference between these cases!

I do not deny that, in the last resort, the exercise of almost any powers might be justifiably used. Salus populi suprema lex. But in such a dire extremity, the Constitution would be suspended, just as the law against the taking of life is suspended in favor of him who is attacked with deadly weapons and driven to the wall. Such a state of things, however, had not come to pass when the legal tender law was enacted, nor ever afterward. No necessity, therefore, ever existed for making that law applicable to pre-existing debts. Mr. SHERMAN, in a recent speech, maintains that it was necessary; but he expresses an opinion only. The experiment had not been tried, and he is, therefore, far from knowing the fact. The opinions of certain merchants of New-York, in support of the supposed necessity, are worth no more than his. Mr. CHASE is confronted with his own letter in support of the legal tender clause; but it is to be observed that he says nothing about applying it to debts already in existence, and so his letter argues nothing in favor of such application, nor any thing in his conscience.

Mr. SHERMAN adds that "the legal tender clause was useful only as a means of compelling creditors to the extent of the depreciation to suffer the loss." Here is justice for you! In other words, Congress, according to Mr. SHERMAN, intended to compel creditors to support the war so to speak, unknowingly. Yet the debtors were at the same time, and by the same measure, to be actually enriched by the common calamity. God help us if future wars are to be carried on upon financial principles so atrocious.

If Congress had felt any regard for justice and private rights, the least it could have done was to try whether a bill with existing debts excepted from its provisions would not have answered every purpose. Had it failed, (and a very short time would have determined the question,) the necessity of including all debts would then have been satisfactorily proved. BRIDGING THE HUDSON.

The Projected Suspension Between St. Anthony's Nose and Fort Clinton—A Stupendous Undertaking—Details of the Plan.

Recently a special act of the State Legislature incorporated the Hudson Highland Suspension Bridge Company. Subsequently an organization was effected, and the following officers appointed: J. M. Courtenay, President; Andrew Carnegie, Vice-President; C. J. Pusey, Treasurer; Jas. H. Jenkins, Secretary; Maj.-Gen. E. W. Serrell, Chief Engineer; Maj.-Gen. Geo. B. McClellan, Consulting Engineer, and the following Board of Directors: John M. Courtenay, Andrew Carnegie, Caleb H. Mabon, Chas. J. Pusey, David Lyman, Edward W. Serrell, N. F. Stanton, S. Dingee, L. T. Guthrie, Geo. B. McClellan, A. C. Mills, R. J. Hubbard, E. R. Wiswell. The estimated cost of this grand undertaking and the exact date for the commencement of its construction are not yet given to the public. But that it is one of the greatest feats of bridge building ever attempted is manifest, from the meagre facts and figures thus far given forth.

THE LOCATION.

Its location is already determined upon. It will span the river, from bluff to bluff, between Fort Clinton, on the western, to St. St. Anthony's Nose, on the eastern side. The abutments and towers will be built upon the natural rock which forms the base of the range of mountains along the river's course, and is of primitive granite of the most enduring and permanent character. There will be one clear span of 1,600 feet. The length of the bridge between the towers is to be 1,866 feet. The total length of the bridge, including the approaches, will be 2,449 feet. The height of the lower part of the bridge above high water mark will be 155 feet.

THE MATERIAL.

The entire structure will be formed of steel combination truss and cable work. The wires to be used in the manufacture of these cables is composed of a new steel of peculiar properties, and in experimental trials, in spans 1,000 feet long, has shown greater tensile strength with less weight than any ever before used. Its tenacity is almost incredible. This structure will surpass that at Niagara, and others, in several respects. While the former is of iron cables and of great weight, this will be of the lighter steel combination truss, more shapely and graceful and firm. The span is

THE LONGEST IN THE WORLD.

The height of the towers above the surface of the water will be 350 feet. There will be four systems and twenty cables, locked or rooted deeply into the rock, and abutments and towers. Each cable will be about fourteen inches in diameter, interlaced and secured by innumerable other and smaller cables. The cables will contain 37,125,760 feet, or 7,029 miles of steel wire. The total weight of iron and steel in the bridge will be about 17,000 tons, and the total suspended weight will be 9,651 tons. The total measurement of masonry will be 58,094 cubic yards. It is calculated that this bridge could safely support a train of sixty locomotives and 30,000 people.

TWO STORIES HIGH.

It will have two decks or floors; the upper one will have narrow and broad-gauge tracks, and will be used for railroad purposes; while the lower one will be devoted to team service. The amount of weight that can ever be crowded upon it at once, will be but one-sixth of its supporting capacity. Of course, the elevation above the water level renders it far out of the way of navigable craft of all kinds. The benefits to accrue from the successful consummation of the undertaking are manifold, and actually resolve themselves into necessities. It opens, what is most imperatively demanded, viz.: a midland, all-rail avenue, uninterrupted by the hitches and proverbial delays of ferriage between the East, North-West and West and the great Metropolis of the nation, at the most practicable crossing point along the Hudson River, and but about forty miles above New-York. As a lesser, but still important consideration, it also opens a carriage and foot highway between the great and populous lands on either bank of the river. The railroad now being built between New-Haven, Derby and Willimantic, Conn., forms a part of the great Eastern and Western line. Negotiations are now progressing toward the consolidation of seven important roads in this enterprise.

CONVERGING RAILROADS.

Among the roads that from natural and inevitable causes will, first or last, be likely to gravitate toward this magnet of necessity, will be the Hudson River, the Boston, Hartford and Erie, the Midland; the West Side Albany, (to be,) the Delaware and Lackawanna, the Harlem, the Danbury and Norwalk, the New-York and New-Haven, the Shore Line, Boston; the New-Haven, Hartford, Springfield, Connecticut Valley, &c., with all their tributaries. Among other benefits it will transport and reduce the cost of millions of tons of coal annually, from the Pennsylvania coal-fields to all points east of the Hudson River, 40 per ton; other freight is saved the onerous charges of transhipment at New-York and across the ferries. The present expense of transferring certain freight from New-York to Jersey City, is about equal to the cost of its transportation by rail between Jersey City and Philadelphia, or between New-York and New-Haven. Several miles' distance is saved between New-York City and Turner's Station (on the Erie Railway,) by crossing this bridge, which is but three miles above Peekskill. These facts and figures—the latter not the final and fixed statements of the projectors of the enterprise, but still in the main correct—give a clear conception of the tremendous scope. The prominent names of the incorporators, before mentioned herein, and those of other friends of the enterprise, induce the belief that but a little more time and negotiation will intervene ere huge capital is required to complete a triumph in the enginery of bridge building such as the world never before saw, or even dreamed of.

Rapid Transit Through New-York—The Proposed Arcade Railway.

George B. McClellan, Wm. J. McAlpine, Egbert L. Viele, Julius W. Adams, Sylvester Sweet, J. F. Quinby and John B. Jervis having been requested as a Board of Engineers "to consider the question of a subway under Broadway, in the City of New-York, with the view of relieving that street from its present interruptions, and of affording a more convenient and speedy transit for passengers and for merchandise, without injury to the property upon the line of the street, or diversion of the established classes of business thereon," have submitted a report in which they say that a Sub-Arcade Railway, such as is proposed by the New-York Arcade Railway Company, will accomplish the objects desired, namely: 1. It provides a pleasant, rapid transit for the immense population of the lower and upper ends of the island, and a slower but still speedy movement for the local passengers. 2. It provides a cheap and convenient channel for the conveyance of freight between the termini of the steam railways, and a large portion of the business houses in the City. 3. It classifies the travel and trade, and removes from the present street so many of its vehicles as to render it more useful and pleasant for carriages. 4. It furnishes an arcade avenue and promenade, convenient for pedestrians at all times, in warm, cold or stormy weather. 5. The subway will be well ventilated and lighted, so that its use will be pleasant and healthy. 6. It can be constructed without interruption either to the travel on the street or the convenient use of the buildings adjacent, and without occupying the street for the hauling of the materials required from or to the work; and it can be built without endangering any of the structures along the street, and with arrangements for a better location of the water and gas pipes and sewers, and without any interruption of the present connections. 7. The route selected is determined by the topography of the island. 8. It in no case occupies or injures any private property, but in nearly all cases greatly enhances the value of the property along its route. 9. There are no difficulties attending the construction of the work which can not be overcome with engineering skill, and at a comparatively moderate cost. Finally, it meets a necessity in the most complete and unobjectionable manner.

The estimated cost is from $1,600,000 to $2,000,000 per mile. The Board thinks the highest of these sums would in general be sufficient to cover the expense.

Sixteenth Ward German-American School Club.

This organization met at No. 111 Seventh-avenue, yesterday afternoon, Mr. C. Dicks presiding. Mr. E. F. Graebert made an address stating that the aims of the Club were not only the introduction of German as a regular branch of instruction in the public schools, but improvement of the methods of teaching practiced in them generally. On his motion it was resolved that the delegates of the Club to the General Committee of the German-American School Association of this City, be instructed accordingly. Dr. Hermine Gerecke made an address urging that only public free schools ought to be maintained by State taxes. On his motion it was resolved that the delegates of the Club to the General Committee of the German-American School Association be instructed to oppose the support of sectarian schools by public money. Mr. Dicks, the Chairman of the Club, who is also President of the Board of School Trustees of the ward, reported that in Grammar School No. 8, in West Twentieth-street, a female teacher was appointed to teach German as a regular branch of instruction. The thanks of the meeting were voted, on his account, to Mr. William A. Baehr, the principal of the school, and Mr. Dicks. A committee was appointed to visit the several public schools of the ward, in order to derive information about them. Dr. Gerecke announced her willingness to address the Club at their next meeting on reading the Bible in the public schools, which was accepted, and she, according thereto, after the transaction of some minor business, adjourned.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

Review of Past Week.

The state of the real estate market during the past week, as evidenced to the public mind at the Exchanges, has not improved. A larger proportion than usual of the sales announced were not actually consummated, and where they were consummated by order of Court, the prices obtained were in general unsatisfactory. Tuesday and Wednesday were apparently busy days, but the rest of the week was dull. The announcements thus far made for the present week show some falling off. Today STANLEY DAY disposed of some improved City property.

The entire amount of auction sales for the week was $200,338. The number of transfers reported were 128, involving consideration money to the amount of $1,730,297.

An address to the people of the United States has been issued on behalf of the Cuban League by a committee appointed for the purpose, urging that belligerent rights be extended by our Government to the struggling people of Cuba. The address will hold a public meeting in Cooper Institute, in the City of New-York, on the 4th day of April next. LONG ISLAND.

C. R. WADE, of Sag Harbor, shipping agent, largely and extensively engaged in the whaling business at that place, has failed, and will pay about fifty per cent. on his liabilities. He has met with heavy losses of late, losing an one ship, not long since, over $2,000. His liabilities are estimated at about $40,000. He has long been identified with the business interests of Sag Harbor.

In the new Game law now pending before the Legislature, the Great South Bay and Long Island Sound are exempted from that clause which prohibits the use of batteries in the killing of duck and other wild fowl. It also provides for the election of a "game constable" to prosecute infractions of the law.

A good deal of feeling is being engendered in Huntington and vicinity against Connecticut oystermen for monopolizing the shores of Long Island in that neighborhood to the exclusion of native oystermen.

In Newtown for the coming Spring election there are seven candidates in the field for Supervisor, six for Town Clerk, six for Justice of the Peace, four for Town Assessor, five for Commissioner of Highways, nine for Collector, nine for Overseer of the Poor, twenty-six for Constable, four for Sealer of Weights and three for Pound Master.

In the Queens County Surrogate's Court last week, the wills of the following persons were admitted to probate: Sarah Ann Betts, Timothy E. Eldert, Chas. L. Bergen, Jos. Smith, George Howles, Oliver Powell, Adeline Doty, Stephen Robbins, Cyntilla Searing, Robert L. Smith, Hester G. Weeks, W. D. Creed, Jane Carmage and Nathaniel Van Sand. Letters of administration for the following estates were also issued: Mary Beatty, Catharine Elders, John Gaynor, Adeline Smith, Jonathan S. Lovereck, Cornelia Bond, David Shine and Mary Cowry.

Petitions for and against the passage of the act in relation to the East River Bridge via Blackwell's Island are extensively circulated in Queens County. The petitions for the act receive most of their names from the Western towns, and those against from the towns near enough to feel the effects. Nearly fourteen in 15 are not in favor of the subscription of the county of Queens to the capital stock of the company. The feeling among the residents of the county is unanimously against it, and it will be a matter of wonder if many of the wealthy people claim that with Queens asses go incorporators, sufficient capital would easily be secured to build the bridge without aid from either New-York or Queens County.

NEW-JERSEY.

A desperate assault was committed late on Saturday night by two ruffians, whose names have not been ascertained, upon Mr. WILLIAM EDGAR SACKETT, a reporter connected with the Press of Jersey City, while he was returning home from Niblo's Theater in company with his wife. The assailants were not arrested.

ELIZABETH GEARY, residing on South Eighth-street, Jersey City, who inflicted a desperate gash with a razor in her abdomen on Saturday evening with suicidal intent, died yesterday morning after suffering much agony. The Sisters of the Poor ministered with her throughout her suffering, and were unremitting in administering spiritual and physical comfort.

Yesterday morning GARRET LANDER, residing on Steuben-street, Jersey City, was arrested on a charge of assaulting his sister-in-law, ELIZA DUFFYES, and threatening her life with a knife. He is held in answer. On Saturday night he called at the Police Station in a semi-drunken condition, and wanted ELIZA arrested for assaulting him with a pitcher, in evidence whereof he showed several lumps on his forehead. The Police advised him to go home and stop drinking; so he took the law into his own hands.

In Newark, at an early hour yesterday morning, JAMES HEDDEN, a belated resident of Fair-street, found two men, one of whom was deeply intoxicated, struggling upon the sidewalk, in Broad-street, over a carpet bag, which one of them was making a desperate attempt to open. HEDDEN saw this man, the least intoxicated of the pair, take from the bag a watch and some other articles, with which he started to leave. The witness of the robbery called a Police Officer and had the two men arrested. The man who took the watch gave his name as ALEX. FENNER, the other gave the name of CHARLES BROWN. It appeared subsequently that FENNER followed BROWN, seeing him intoxicated, and robbed him. He was committed for trial. BROWN was discharged.

A dispatch was received at the Newark Police Station, yesterday, stating that a large amount of silk and dry goods had been stolen from a store in that place on Saturday night. "Two men dressed in cape," according to the account of the dispatch, were the thieves; but the Chief of Police, of Rahway, who furnished the news, gave no more definite information.

The new system of mail delivery goes into operation in Newark today. There will be four deliveries each day in the central wards, which include the business portion of the city, two in the wards adjoining, and one daily in the outskirts of the city.

The contents of SEFKE'S wine factory, at Passaic, recently seized by the internal revenue authorities, have been libeled.

RICHARD ROSS, of Paterson, has been held to bail in $1,000 on a charge of having struck DANIEL WALL with a hammer, cutting him severely.

Mr. DAVID CAMPBELL, tax collector of Paterson, yesterday detected three burglars entering the place of business, on Prospect-street, and fired at them, wounding one of the number who was carried away by the other two.

Mr. GEORGE FAIR, of Hackensack, has given $1,000 toward frescoing the First Reformed Church of that village.

A foot race between two Paterson landlords is announced to take place at 2 o'clock this afternoon, the wager being $40 and supper for twenty.

Papal Infallibility—Sermon by Rev. Dr. Beach.

"Roman Error and Catholic Truth concerning Infallibility" was the subject of a discourse at St. Peter's Episcopal Church, West Twentieth-street, last evening, by Rev. Dr. BEACH, rector. The doctor took as his text verses seven, eight and nine of the first chapter of Galatians. After alluding to the importance of the subject, and to the excitement now occasioned by it, the reverend gentleman said that infallibility is an attribute of the Creator, and of Him alone, except in so far that His law, being recorded in the Bible, is also infallible; that the Scriptures were liable to be misinterpreted was known when the Church was established. Was any provision made against this?—any means by which error might be corrected? On this point, he said, we are at variance with the Church of Rome. Infallibility is no new doctrine in that Church. Its theologians have always claimed that infallibility belongs to the Church, the only question being, in the past, where this infallibility is lodged—whether in the Pope alone, or in the Pope and a majority of the Episcopacy, or acting in council. When once any thing has been declared an article of faith, says the Roman Church, it is to be held as true and infallible. The distinctive teachings of the Roman Church will be made to supersede the Bible in every school just as soon as that Church gets the power and dares it, perhaps, not so to do. The preacher then declared that the doctrine of infallibility as attaching to the Pope himself, has long been believed by the Bishops who are nearest the Holy Father. Cardinal BELLARMINE, one hundred years ago, held and announced this doctrine. The time for officially promulgating the dogma, however, has never seemed appropriate till now. As to the Bishops in the Council, it should be understood that they are entirely at the Pope's mercy; they are all in the position of curates and delegates. Whether those in the Council who have proved strong enough, at least to delay the promulgation of the dogma, thus far, will remain firm, is very doubtful. Turning to the other side of the question, the preacher denied the necessity for, as well as the existence of, infallibility. The passages of Scripture relied on in its favor are not clear enough to prove its existence in any successor of St. Peter. The discussion in the Church of Rome itself on this question shows that it does not exist there at all. Even conceding that the Pope is infallible, the thing is useless in itself. The Pope, if infallible, may not make his meaning sufficiently clear, and then there would be a necessity for an infallible interpreter of the Pope's infallibility. Lastly, the preacher contended that the idea of vesting infallibility in any mere mortal is an insult to God—as God he will be sitting in the temple of God, proclaiming himself as God. The time must come when this matter will attract attention and meet consideration elsewhere than in church pulpits. This may be the last, but surely it is not the least, of the Devil's inventions. The text teaches three truths: 1. That there is but one Gospel. 2. Any thing repugnant to that Gospel is to be discarded, no matter who may preach it. 3. The Christian is to be himself the judge of the truth of any proposition offered in his belief, and the Church must be the witness simply of that truth. These constitute the great and lasting differences between the Episcopal Church and the Church of Rome—differences that will continue until the Church of Rome reforms her teachings and discards her errors.

Relief for Destitute Jews.

The preliminary steps were taken yesterday for the organization of a society in aid of destitute Jews, who may from time to time be compelled to take refuge in this country, and thereby escape from the persecutions to which they are subjected in Europe. The meeting was held in a public-house at the corner of Fourteenth-street and Seventh-avenue, and was organized by the selection of THOMAS H. REASING as Chairman, and E. S. ISAACS as Secretary. After discussing the objects of the society, and the best means for accomplishing its aims, a Committee of seven was appointed to prepare a plan of organization, and submit the same at the next meeting, to be held at the same place on Sunday afternoon next, at 3 o'clock. The Committee consists of the following gentlemen: T. A. W. Kohn, M. Ellinger, P. J. Joachimsen, H. B. Harris, T. J. Solomon, Abraham Cohen and Thomas J. Keasing. The sum of $200 was subscribed as the nucleus of the fund, and it is expected that when the objects of the proposed association become more widely known among the Israelites of this City, ample funds will be obtained to carry out the charitable designs.

Street Boys' Sunday Meeting.

The homeless boys of the City who are daily engaged in selling papers, blacking boots and peddling small wares, seldom go to church. They have no fine clothes, and their appearance at church in their usually grotesque habiliments, would attract an amount of curious attention that they do not care to encounter. They take pride, however, in the religious meetings held every Sunday evening at their lodging houses, and generally join in the exercises with much decorum and apparent seriousness. The services of the Phillips Lodge, No. 327 Rivington-street, were conducted last night by Mr. H. B. HAWLEY, whose earnest and appropriate remarks secured the undivided attention of the boys. These Sunday evening meetings with the street boys are exerting a powerful influence for good, and afford a wide and fruitful field for earnest Christian laborers.

The Midnight Mission.

Rev. GEO. THRALL delivered a discourse, last evening, at the Church of the Ascension, corner of Fifth-avenue and Tenth-street, on behalf of the Amity-street Midnight Mission. He took for his text the words: "Shouldest not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow servant, even as I had pity on thee?"—Matthew, xviii. 33. He spoke of the work of this mission as by no means a hopeless one. No character, he said, was so degraded that there was not left in it something of the divine which could be reached and developed to the salvation of the soul. The Midnight Mission of London had been in operation some years, and great was the good it had effected in all directions by faith and hope. The speaker said that he had been in speaking order, and had attended many of the meetings of the mission, and was well acquainted with the good it had effected. He had to do with twenty years of a lifetime, and point in my heart, and I can bear witness, that I was with him through life. To him God gave five talents, whereas to others he gives but one. He was never a painful preacher, though eloquent and successful. He once remarked to the preacher that he never had an unhappy period in his life. Everything he did was done with as much ease, and yet so thoroughly, that it was plain he had been endowed with extraordinary powers. He had talent, it was true; he had power, it was his ability. It was not that God gave him which made him great, but that portions of God's gifts which he used. His were not random shots; he aimed high, and kept steadily to his aim. Blessed with intelligent and godly parents, yet to himself and his own energy did Dr. MCCLINTOCK owe his great success. Death waits not for the noblest men, or for the accomplishment of their desires. Engaged at the time of his death in the preparation of an Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, which when completed would have been invaluable to the Church, and a monument of sanctified learning, yet he was cut off in the midst of this great and unfinished effort of his life. God doubtless will find instruments to do his work, but in the language of Bishop JANES, the Church is at a loss to know how to replace the good and great man gone. The sermon was concluded by an earnest exhortation to young men to follow the example of the eminent deceased, in early embracing religion, in cultivating a high and sanctified ambition, and the cultivation of those talents which God has bestowed on each for His service and glory.

MULLER'S CONTEMPT.

Another Story About the Ludlow-Street Prisoner—No Immediate Prospect of His Release.

No decisive steps have yet been taken, so far as can be ascertained, for procuring the release of WILLIAM MULLER, the poor inventor, from Ludlow-street Jail, where he has been confined since June, 1868, for alleged contempt of Court, as previously reported in the TIMES. It is understood, however, from information which is said to have been communicated to MULLER by a prominent officer of the India Rubber Comb Company, that the fine in his case, amounting to $2,500, was remitted by the Company a short time ago; but this act of leniency, so far as his liberation is concerned, has only proved a delusion. It is thought that if the fine had been actually and fully remitted, nothing could prevent MULLER from being set free. MULLER is of the opinion that he will not be immediately released unless he signs a paper acknowledging himself guilty, and also makes certain promises in favor of the Rubber Company, which he is determined not to do, believing himself innocent of the charges which have been brought against him. His belief is based on a recent conversation which took place between himself and one of his alleged persecutors. MULLER, for his own part, insists that he was never guilty of violating the Goodyear hard rubber patent, and offers to submit his own process, for which he obtained a bona fide patent, to some such gentleman as Prof. R. OGDEN DOREMUS for chemical analysis, for the purpose of deciding whether it is an infringement on the Goodyear invention, as his been claimed by the owners of the latter. He is confident that such an investigation, if fairly conducted, would prove his patent to be no infringement. An analysis of his process was made previous to his imprisonment, but he emphatically asserts that it was not made by a regular analytical chemist, and that it was incorrect, owing to some reason unknown to him and which he can only suspect. One of the strong points which MULLER makes in proof of his innocence is the fact that the Rubber Company has been paying his wife a weekly pension of $10 ever since he was sentenced. He cannot see why the Company should desire to keep him imprisoned for nearly two years, as a matter of pecuniary consideration for the purpose of obtaining the sum of $2,500 as damages, while it has paid out nearly that amount for the support of his wife. The friends of the poor prisoner are anxious to have some well known lawyer undertake his case and bring it before the Court and the public in its proper light, but they say if it is impossible to raise any considerable amount of money for legal services. Some of MULLER's statements relate to the secret history of the rubber patent suits and wealthy monopolies, and the miseeds of public officials, and, if true, show a great and startling amount of corruption and dishonesty among high and reputedly respectable citizens.

The Ulster County Murder—Views of a Correspondent.

Regarding the recently published statements that DANIEL A. HASBROUCK, the Ulster County farmer, was killed in self-defence by the colored man, who knocked his brains out with an ax, Mr. JOHN BOMBIE, of Highland, Ulster County, writes that he had known Mr. HASBROUCK from childhood as one who enjoyed the respect and esteem of his friends and neighbors. The evidence before the Coroner, he continues, has shown that the negro had been treated with great kindness in the family, and that he was of a malicious disposition, frequently making threats against persons employed with him on the farm. On the morning on which he committed the murder he told one of the men by his peculiarious gestures, which were well understood, that he intended to kill his benefactor, but these violent threats had been so common against others, that they were unheeded in this case and nothing was said of them to Mr. HASBROUCK. It was also proven by a young woman of the family, who stood in the front door in fair view, and not twenty paces from the parties, that Mr. HASBROUCK came out of the house, and, walking up to the negro, who was chopping wood, commenced talking to him in the usual way, making signs, and immediately on his coming within reach, the negro assaulted him with the ax, the first blow felling him to stun Mr. HASBROUCK, who turned to get away, and received a second blow, cutting down in the shoulder. This alarmed the young woman, who ran into the house. A most respectable farmer testified that he was talking to one of Mr. HASBROUCK's men from his wagon, about fifty or seventy-five paces distant, and saw the tragedy. The man also saw it, and started to save Mr. HASBROUCK, but, on coming up to within about twenty paces of the parties, he saw Mr. HASBROUCK lying on his face, and saw the negro strike him two blows on the head with the ax, which finished out his brains. As to the character of the deceased clubbing the negro, our correspondent can, from personal knowledge, pronounce it wholly false and malicious. The negro was a most powerful man, and one whom the deceased would have been unable to cope with in any attempt at abuse. His strength was prodigious. The family have very good reason to think the negro was instigated to commit the crime by parties in the neighborhood.

Extensive Revival at Newburg.

The most extensive religious interest ever known in the history of Newburg, on the Hudson, has prevailed throughout the Methodist and Baptist Churches during the past Fall and Winter months. In both the Methodist Churches this feeling began to be manifested during the Fall, and may be said to have had its source in the remarkable fervor demonstrated at the sessions of the great Camp Meeting at Wesley's Grove last Summer. In the latter part of December—an earlier date than usual—it was deemed necessary to begin the protracted meetings. Public interest at once assumed a decided gravitation towards religious centers, and continued with unabated ardor. Every night in the meetings of the Trinity and the Second Methodist Episcopal Churches the houses were crowded, at times scores were away unable even to obtain standing room. Preaching services and prayer meetings were marked by immediate and decided results. The altars were filled with penitents, and large numbers were received on profession. This class of things seemed to increase in the other Churches. The Baptists commenced a series of meetings, and similar successful results followed. Large congregations thronged the Church and evinced the deepest interest. Sabbath after Sabbath new converts were baptized by immersion and received into the communion and church fellowship. At times the church has been filled—pews, galleries, aisles and every standing place, even out in the vestibule to the door—and hundreds went away unable to obtain admission. Large congregations have also attended the Union Presbyterian Church meetings. At the Trinity M. E. Church, Rev. M. ABBOTT, Pastor, 222 have been converted. At the Second M. E. Church, Rev. H. H. BIRKINS, Pastor, about one hundred and forty have professed religion. Rev. Mr. BLISS, Pastor of the Baptist Church, has baptized about fifty. Great interest is yet felt in all these Churches—and in Rev. Mr. PRIMM', although the special meetings have ceased. Altogether, over five hundred persons have either made open declaration, or shown penitential resolutions of a changed and better life. The Trinity M. E. Church has recently received a new $5,000 organ.

A Police Officer Committed for Assaulting a Woman and a Child.

At the Essex Market Police Court, yesterday, before Judge LEDWITH, PATRICK MCGUIRE, a Police officer attached to the Seventh Precinct, was brought up charged with clubbing a child named CHARLES O'BRIEN and seriously assaulting BRIDGET MCGIVNEY, a married woman residing on Henry-street, by striking her in several parts of the body with his club. It appeared that during the early part of Saturday McGUIRE indulged freely in ardent drinks, and when "told off" on the evening for duty was in a state of intoxication. After leaving the precinct he immediately gave vent to his feelings in a furious assault on a child named O'BRIEN, whom he clubbed with the evidence of his prowess, and, not satisfied with this, he came after, meeting Mrs. MCGIVNEY, who was coming out of her house, and knocked her down with a club. Officer MCGUIRE was then arrested by the Sergeant of the Precinct, and taken to the Police Office. Prosecutor and witnesses were all in attendance at the Station. The officers found him in a disgraceful state of drunkenness, and at once placed him under arrest. Upon being charged with the offense yesterday, he did not offer a single extenuating circumstance, but, on receiving a well-merited reprimand from Judge LEDWITH, he was fully committed for trial in default of bail.

The Case of Mr. Barrett M. Johnson.

Assistant District Attorney FELLOWS has written the following letter in regard to Mr. BARRETT M. JOHNSON's connection with the proceedings against JEROME BRADLEY:

DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE, March 5, 1870.

GENTLEMEN: In reply to yours of yesterday, referring to proceedings in the trial of JEROME BRADLEY, I have to say that Mr. JOHNSON did not become "State's witness," as that term is commonly used. To be sure, he gave evidence on the part of the people. But no intimation was ever made to him that he would be used as a witness, and the nolle prosequi was entered as to him for the sole reason that there was no evidence implicating him in the alleged larceny.

J. B. FELLOWS,
Assistant District Attorney.

J. K. HERBERT and S. H. STUART.
